THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS
WASHINGTON

The Honorable Bob Stump
Chairman
House Committee on Armed Services
United States House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515-6035

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As requested, I am writing to express the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 1724, the "United States Cadet Nurse Corps Equity Act of 2001." This legislation would provide that service of the members of the United States Cadet Nurse Corps during World War II constituted active military service for purposes of laws administered by VA. For the reasons discussed below, we defer to the views of the Secretary of Defense.

Congress has already provided an opportunity for organizations like the United States Cadet Nurse Corps to seek recognition of their service as active military service. Under Public Law No. 95-202, §401, 91 Stat. 1433, 1449 (1977), the Department of Defense (DoD) has authority to determine whether service rendered by a civilian or a group of civilians may be considered active duty for purposes of all laws administered by VA. In order to receive recognition by DoD, the members of such a group must have rendered service to the United States Armed Forces in a capacity considered civilian employment or contractual service at the time such service was rendered. Moreover, the Secretary of Defense acting through the Secretary of the Air Force must determine, after consideration of various factors and a thorough review of all available evidence pertaining to the service of any such group, that the service of such group should be considered active military service. Applications for recognition of the service of particular groups are considered by DoD's Civilian/Military Service Review Board under procedures found in title 32, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 47. Those regulations explain the application process and where to file a completed application.

In consideration of these facts, VA defers to the views of the Secretary of Defense concerning enactment of H.R. 1724.

I

H. R. 1724

To provide that service of the members of the organization known as the United States Cadet Nurse Corps during World War II constituted active military service for purposes of laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MAY 3, 2001

Mrs. LOWEY (for herself and Mr. OBERSTAR) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, and in addition to the Committee on Armed Services, for a period to be subsequently determined by the Speaker, in each case for consideration of such provisions as fall within the jurisdiction of the committee concerned

A BILL

To provide that service of the members of the organization known as the United States Cadet Nurse Corps during World War II constituted active military service for purposes of laws administered by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "United States Cadet Nurse Corps Equity Act of 2001".

REV_00130617

SEC. 2. SERVICE DEEMED TO BE ACTIVE MILITARY SERVICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 401(a)(1)(A) of the GI Bill Improvement Act of 1977 (38 U.S.C. 106 note), the Secretary of Defense is deemed to have determined that qualified service of a person constituted active military service.

(b) DETERMINATION OF DISCHARGE STATUS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall issue an honorable discharge under section 401(a)(1)(B) of the GI Bill Improvement Act of 1977 to each person whose qualified service warrants an honorable discharge.

(2) Such discharge shall be issued before the end of the one-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION OF RETROACTIVE BENEFITS.

No benefits may be paid to any person as a result of the enactment of this Act for any period before the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. DEFINITION.

For purposes of this Act, the term "qualified service" means service of a person as a member of the organization known as the United States Cadet Nurse Corps during the period beginning on July 1, 1943, and ending on December 15, 1945.

We're holding a book of US Marshall candidates until Friday.

The Judge has indicated that we can hold the book until Friday in the event there are any more US Marshal, US Attorney or judicial candidates to submit to the President.

Please let me know if you'll have any additions.

Thanks,
Jason

This is mine. I recommend against anyone in the White House meeting directly with Microsoft while this litigation is pending, as it would create the appearance of White House interference with this ongoing litigation. The ultimate decision on this, however, should probably be made by Judge Gonzales.

I've been asked to follow -up on a Microsoft question. Forgive me if you've been badgered about this from other directions, I haven't worked with them much since the energy project came up, but here it is:

Will it be possible for them to brief Larry and/or you (and anyone else you think should be there) on their new operating system "Windows XP"?

I think they have formally offered, but I don't know that they've gotten a reply. Let me know if you can, and I'll get the answer to them. Obviously, they would appreciate the opportunity to do it. -- TJ.M

Subject: AG REMARKS 8/7 AT THE ABA

Attorney General Prepared Remarks to the American Bar Association
[NOTE: THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OFTEN DEVIATES FROM PREPARED REMARKS]
August 7, 2001

Today I'd like to speak with you about federal judges. Judges are an important topic to the ABA, and they are a subject of great importance and great significance to the American people.

In fact, judges have been a topic of growing discussion and debate in recent years. The reason for this growing interest in judges is almost certainly the special role that federal judges play in our democracy.

Before this great American enterprise in freedom was formalized in our Constitution there were numerous experiments in the colonies. Among the most novel was that of Governor Oglethorpe of the Georgia colony who believed in William Shakespeare enough to abolish all the lawyers. Without lawyers the citizens soon found themselves absent the capacity to resolve disputes. And, in order that commerce flourish lawyers were re-welcomed with open arms. Necessity, the mother of invention, demonstrated that judges, and lawyers for that matter, are indispensable. Judges are Essential.

This recognition ultimately was enshrined in Article III of our Constitution, creating the basis of our federal courts to hear the new cases and controversies in our fledgling union.

This duty involves weighty, complex and sometimes politically unpopular choices. Federal judges hear suits brought by citizens challenging acts of government that impinge on individual rights. Federal judges decide disputes between and within the Executive and Legislative branches. In some cases, they declare unconstitutional acts of Congress that have garnered high levels of public support.
In an attempt to address this unpopular component of the role of federal judges, James Madison is credited with the idea of an independent judiciary - making federal judges appointed, not elected and life-tenured. This independence makes federal judges and the judiciary not only essential, but unique insulated and independent in a democracy of political winds, influences and pressures.

Madison recognized that insulation -- the quality of the independent judiciary -- would facilitate the ability of federal judges to make the hard decisions based on the law and not in response to the pressure of electoral politics.
Of course this insulation also invests judges with a power almost unparalleled in our constitutional system, a power necessary for the job, but a power that has potential for great mischief.

So we know that judges are essential - the Georgia principle, and judges are uniquely independent, the Madisonian mandate.

Given the great responsibilities and powers of federal judges, the American people deserve judicial nominees of the highest quality. We need individuals who are of the highest intellect, who have great experience in the law, and who have impeccable character and integrity. We need men and women from diverse backgrounds, who reflect the many faces, opportunities and challenges of America. Most importantly, in light of the great power wielded by federal judges, we need federal judges who understand the limits of that power.

Justice Felix Frankfurter wisely said, "The highest exercise of judicial duty is to subordinate one's personal will and one's private views to the Law." This is the idea of "judicial restraint" - the self-imposed rule under which judges interpret the text of the law and apply it neutrally. Judicial restraint is contrasted with "judicial activism," the practice of judges imposing an alternative view to that expressed in the law, the practice of usurping the legislative function to make policy decisions leaving voters without the political recourse the founders expected. In effect, this expands the unique character of the judicial world to the universe of policy and legislation. Such an expansion would have alarmed Madison indeed.

Academic discussions of judicial activism and restraint have done little to enlighten the American public. The decisions we will ask our federal judges to make -- the issues we will expect them to weigh -- will effect each and every one of us in ways large and small. It is important that we know we have a right to expect these decisions to be made with respect for the law. It is crucial that we understand that "judicial restraint" isn't the stuff of academic ivory towers but the respect for the rule of law that honors and protects families and schools and businesses.

Judicial restraint means that if the Constitution says you have a right to compensation when the government takes your property, then a judge cannot create exceptions for property that the government really doesn't want to pay for, by letting the government so heavily regulate the property as to make it worthless.

Judicial restraint means that if a judge rules that certain changes need to be made to a school system to fulfill the constitutional guarantee of equal protection, it is the citizens and their representatives who will decide how to fund those changes, not a judge developing tax policy and resource allocations by ordering a tax increase.

Judicial restraint means judges refusing to create on their own a criminal justice system that lets clearly guilty criminals "off on a technicality." That particular idiom "off on a technicality" came into more widespread use in American culture in the late 1960's and 70's, when Americans started to see the impact of unrestrained judges who used clearly written precise protections for criminal defendants in the Constitution to justify new protections that were not in the Constitution. Judges thought these manufactured "rights" were "fair," and that "fairness" provided all the necessary authority for the change. Americans were not consulted on these new protections, they just had to deal with the increased crime when these criminals were released back onto the streets and back into their neighborhoods.

These decisions -- decisions made without respect for the law, decisions made without the consent of the people -- affect Americans.

President Bush understands this. He knows how important talented and restrained federal judges are to the business of the American people. We need only look at the extraordinary caliber and character of his nominees, 44 of them currently, to see what a high priority the President has placed on judicial nominees.

For example, Miguel Estrada, who the President has nominated to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. Born in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, Miguel immigrated with his family to the United States as a teenager. Speaking virtually no English, Miguel went on to graduate Phi Beta Kappa from Columbia College and at the top of his Harvard Law School class. Miguel then began a distinguished career in public service. He was a law clerk to Judge Amalya Kearse in New York, and then to Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy. He went on to serve as a federal prosecutor in New York. He served as an attorney in the Solicitor General's Office at the Department of Justice in both the Bush and Clinton Administrations. Miguel is a brilliant and talented attorney, a dedicated husband, and man of the utmost integrity and compassion. He understands the proper role of a judge is to subordinate his personal preferences-- to apply, rather than amend,-- the law. If confirmed, he would be the first Hispanic American to ever sit on the D.C. Circuit. He is a shining example of the promise of America.

Miguel is representative of the individuals President Bush has nominated to the federal bench. The President has sought, and will continue to seek the most talented, intelligent, and upstanding candidates he can find for the federal bench. The President will continue to look for candidates from diverse backgrounds, with different experiences and different perspectives. The President has unequivocally rejected any notion of an issue-specific or political litmus test, insisting that the only value that his nominees share is a dedication to the rule of law and an understanding of the proper role of a federal judge, a role that leaves policy-making to the American people and their elected representatives.

The ABA has helped to ensure that the President's nominees are qualified to serve the American people as federal judges. You have promptly reviewed the qualifications of 17 of the 44 pending nominees, and have rated every one of them qualified for the post to which they are nominated. In fact, you have rated 70% of these candidates "well-qualified" to be judges, the ABA's highest rating.

As you may know, there are some who have called into doubt the impartiality of the ABA's judicial ratings. An analysis of previous ABA ratings under the first Bush and the Clinton administrations was the subject of a discussion in yesterday's Wall Street Journal by Professor James Lindgren of Northwestern University. Professor Lindgren argues that his analysis demonstrates that, "Clinton nominees had more than 10 times better odds of getting the ABA's highest rating than similarly credentialed former-President Bush appointees." Professor Lindgren attributes this disparity to a political bias in favor of liberal judges. Undoubtedly, there are others who argue that no such bias exists. In any event, I think we can agree that no political bias should exist. I am heartened by the ABA's ratings thus far, and am confident that - judged by the same standards used to rate the last administration - the vast majority of President Bush's nominees will continue to receive "well qualified" ratings.

And as you go about weighing the qualifications of President Bush's nominees for the federal bench, there is another way in which you could use your considerable clout to help serve the American people: by making sure that these nominees whom you have found so qualified have an opportunity to be reviewed and voted upon by the United States Senate. Currently there is a serious number of vacancies on the federal courts - 108 vacancies out of 862 positions, more than 12%. President Bush has recognized the urgency of this problem, and has made it one of his top priorities. He has nominated judges at a record pace - 44 judicial candidates so far this year.

By comparison, President Reagan made 13 circuit and district nominations before the end of the August recess in1981; President George H.W. Bush made 8 before the August recess in 1989; and President Clinton made 13 before the August recess in 1993.

President Bush submitted his first 11 nominations on May 9, two months before Presidents Reagan or Clinton made their first nominations. Given the large numbers of vacancies I described before, President Bush's pace is particularly important. I know I don't need to tell you that judicial vacancies mean delays in the time it takes to have one's case heard, raising the specter of the old adage "Justice delayed is Justice denied."

You can help minimize this delay by continuing to review the President's nominees thoroughly, but quickly, and by urging the Senate to continue the non-partisan, historical practice of holding hearings and votes on judicial nominees. By way of example, in the first years of the past three Administrations -- Reagan, Bush, and Clinton -- all but one of the nominees who were nominated before the end of the August recess were confirmed in the first year of the presidency. The one judge who was not confirmed was rated "not qualified" by the ABA. Consistent with that history, the Senate should move forward and act on all 44 of President Bush's nominations this year.

So far, the confirmation process has moved slowly. As you will recall, the President announced the nomination of 11 circuit judges on May 9 at an event in the East Room of the White House. Eight of those 11 individuals were nominated to judicial vacancies that have been classified as "judicial emergencies" by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. You have reviewed these nominees, and found all to be either qualified or well qualified for judicial office. Yet only 1 of those 11 nominees has received a hearing in the Senate Judiciary Committee. I know that the Senate has been very busy. In fact, I want to commend the Senate for acting so quickly on some important non-judicial appointments. In the last two weeks, they have confirmed a new Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, a new Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, and a new director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Among these three positions, these new appointees oversee more than 72,000 employees. But these judicial nominations are also a high priority. I know that Senator Leahy, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, understands this urgency. I'd ask you to help him in ensuring that the rest of the Senate places as high a priority on these nominations as does the President.

The American people deserve a federal judiciary operating at full strength and peak efficiency, providing equal access to speedy justice. The Administration is doing its part. Now the Senate and those organizations involved in the process, including the ABA, must join us in working for the prompt confirmation of the outstanding men and women the President has nominated to be federal judges.

In 1847, at a gathering of lawmakers in Charleston, South Carolina, Daniel Webster raised his glass in a toast. "To the law," Webster said. " It has honored us; may we honor it." As we look forward to working together on this and other issues of critical importance to the administration of the nation's laws, let us offer a similar tribute to the citizens who look to us to help protect their rights and freedoms. They have honored us with their trust. May we honor them with justice.

Thank you very much.

EMBRYONIC STEM CELL RESEARCH

"As a result of private research, more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines already exist.. . I have concluded that we should allow federal funds to be used for research on these existing stem cell lines – where the life and death decision has already been made.. . This allows us to explore the promise and potential of stem cell research – without crossing a fundamental moral line by providing taxpayer funding that would sanction or encourage further destruction of human embryos that have at least the potential for life."
-- George W. Bush

% Federal funding of research using existing embryonic stem cell lines is consistent with the President's belief in the fundamental value and sanctity of human life. The President's decision reflects his fundamental commitment to preserving the value and sanctity of human life and his desire to promote vital medical research. The President's decision will permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but will not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional human embryos. The embryos from which the existing stem cell lines were created have already been destroyed and no longer have the possibility of further development as human beings. Federal funding of medical research on these existing stem cell lines will promote the sanctity of life – without undermining it – and will allow scientists to explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying diseases.

% Federal funds will only be used for research on existing stem cell lines that were derived: (1) with the informed consent of the donors; (2) from excess embryos created solely for reproductive purposes; and (3) without any financial inducements to the donors. In order to ensure that federal funds are used to support only stem cell research that is scientifically sound, legal, and ethical, the NIH will examine the derivation of all existing stem cell lines and create a registry of those lines that satisfy this criteria. More than 60 existing stem cell lines from genetically diverse populations around the world are expected to be available for federally-funded research.

% No federal funds will be used for: (1) the derivation or use of stem cell lines derived from newly destroyed embryos ; (2) the creation of any human embryos for research purposes; or (3) the cloning of human embryos for any purpose. Today's decision relates only to the use of federal funds for research on existing stem cell lines derived in accordance with the criteria set forth above.

% The President will create a new President's Council on Bioethics, chaired by Dr. Leon Kass, an expert in biomedical ethics and a professor at the University of Chicago, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behaviorial science and technology. The Council will study such issues as embryo and stem cell research, assisted reproduction, cloning, genetic screening, gene therapy, euthanasia, psychoactive drugs, and brain implants.

BACKGROUND

% Embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells, which come from the inner cell mass of a human embryo, have the potential to develop into all or nearly all of the tissues in the body. The scientific term for this characteristic is "pluripotentiality."

% Adult stem cells. Adult stem cells are unspecialized, can renew themselves, and can become specialized to yield all of the cell types of the tissue from which they originate. Although scientists believe that some adult stem cells from one tissue can develop into cells of another tissue, no adult stem cell has been shown in culture to be pluripotent.

% The potential of embryonic stem cell research. Many scientists believe that embryonic stem cell research may eventually lead to therapies that could be used to treat diseases that afflict approximately 128 million Americans. Treatments may include replacing destroyed dopamine-secreting neurons in a Parkinson's patient's brain; transplanting insulin-producing pancreatic beta cells in diabetic patients; and infusing cardiac muscle cells in a heart damaged by myocardial infarction. Embryonic stem cells may also be used to understand basic biology and to evaluate the safety and efficacy of new medicines.

% The creation of embryonic stem cells. To create embryonic stem cells for research, a "stem cell line" must be created from the inner cell mass of a week-old embryo. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells can grow and divide indefinitely. A stem cell line is a mass of cells descended from the original, sharing its genetic characteristics. Batches of cells can then be separated from the cell line and distributed to researchers.

% The origin of embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells are derived from excess embryos created in the course of infertility treatment. As a result of standard in vitro fertilization practices, many excess human embryos are created. Participants in IVF treatment must ultimately decide the disposition of these excess embryos, and many individuals have donated their excess embryos for research purposes.

% Existing stem cell lines. There are currently more than 60 existing different human embryonic stem cell lines that have been developed from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization with the consent of the donors and without financial inducement. These existing lines are used in approximately one dozen laboratories around the world (in the United States, Australia, India, Israel, and Sweden).

% Therapies from adult and embryonic stem cell research. To date, adult stem cell research, which is federally-funded, has resulted in the development of a variety of therapeutic treatments for diseases. Although embryonic stem cell research has not yet produced similar results, many scientists believe embryonic stem cell research holds promise over time because of the capacity of embryonic stem cells to develop into any tissue in the human body.

Questions and Answers

Stem Cell Q&A

1. Isn't this a reversal of the position President Bush took in his campaign and in a letter as recently as May 18? Didn't he say unequivocally that he "oppose[s] Federal funding for stem-cell research that involves destroying living human embryos"?

The President has always believed that human life is sacred. He has never retreated from that position, either as governor of Texas, during his campaign for President, or as President. And he does not retreat from that position today with his decision to permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines, where the life and death decision has already been made. At the same time, he is unwilling to direct taxpayer funds for research on stem cell lines that have not yet been derived, because that might encourage the destruction of additional embryos.

Embryonic stem cell research raises profound medical and ethical questions, questions about which the President has thought deeply. After long reflection, he has come to the conclusion that supporting this research using existing stem cell lines, which has the potential to save millions and millions of lives, is consistent with his personal pro-life beliefs.

2. The President said that he would name a Presidential Council to study this issue. What will the Commission's mandate be?

The President's Council on Bioethics, which will be chaired by Dr. Leon Kass of the University of Chicago will monitor embryonic stem cell research and study the human and moral meaning of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

3. Does this mean that the federal government will start regulating fertility clinics?

Additional federal oversight of the embryo donation process may be necessary. Since the NIH will need to ensure that fertility clinics obtain consent from embryo donors and carry out embryo donors' decisions, some federal supervision of these facilities may be appropriate.

4. How soon will scientists receive money for research on embryonic stem cells?

The NIH will begin working immediately on the creation of a registry of existing stem cell lines that meet three essential criteria:

- The embryos' donors' consent must be fully informed;
- The stem cell lines must be derived from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization, not for research purposes.
- The embryo donation must have been made without any financial inducement.

5. The Dickey amendment says that federal funds cannot be spent on "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed [or] discarded." Does this law permit the funding of stem cell research?

The Dickey appropriations rider prohibits the use of federal funds for "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed, discarded, or knowingly subjected to risk of injury or death greater than that allowed for research on fetuses in utero." The research that the President has agreed to fund (using existing stem cell lines where the life and death decisions have already been made) does not violate the Dickey amendment. No Federal funds will be used for the destruction of human embryos or the derivation of stem cells, and no Federal funds will be used for research on stem cell lines created from human embryos that are alive as of this date.

6. Couldn't excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization be donated to a woman who would have them implanted, so that they may become babies?

The disposition of excess embryos created in the course of in vitro treatment is a private decision for the participants in that treatment. The participants may choose to donate their excess embryos to another woman or couple, to have them destroyed, or to donate them to research.

9. How are embryonic stem cells derived?

To derive embryonic stem cells for research, a researcher removes the inner cell mass from a week-old embryo. The embryo at this stage is about 100 cells in size and is barely visible to the naked eye. The removal of the inner cell mass destroys the embryo. The stem cells are then cultured, or grown, under special conditions in the laboratory. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells will grow and divide (perhaps) indefinitely. These potentially immortal cultures are known as "stem cell lines."

10. Why can't the government simply fund adult stem cell research?

Although stem cells can also be derived from adult tissues, many scientists believe that, unlike embryonic stem cells, adult stem cells are not pluripotent (meaning they do not have the ability to develop into all the different types of human tissue). Thus, most scientists believe that adult stem cells are not as promising an avenue for treating and preventing disease as embryonic stem cells.

12. Won't this approach bless the destruction of human life by allowing us to profit from morally disturbing research?

There are several important medical therapies, including the chicken pox vaccine, the rabies vaccine, and the Hepatitis A vaccine, that have been derived from fetal tissue, including in some instances aborted fetuses. Although many people have very strong moral objections to abortions, most people do not shun these important vaccines.

13. What is the President's response to the disease sufferers who might have benefited from additional research?

While there is certainly great hope for successful cures and therapies from embryonic stem cell research, the reality is that medical realities often do not live up to their expectations. Eight years ago, there was great enthusiasm over fetal tissue research, yet to date, the promise of such research has not fulfilled its expectations. . By funding research on more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines, the President believes, based on conversations with some of the nation's leading scientists, that we will be able to fully explore the promise and potential of embryonic stem cell research.

14. How do we know there are 60? Where do they come from? Who owns patents?

    The NIH has been reviewing the state of stem cell science and they have reported that there are now more than 60 identifiable stem cell lines that have been created from excess embryos produced for in vitro fertilization and without any financial inducements to the donors. The NIH is looking into the patents and will obviously be engaged in negotiating material transfer agreements with the holders of the relevant patents.

15. Won't these embryos be destroyed anyway?

    Although many of these embryos may well be destroyed, the fact that a life is going to end does not justify actively terminating it. We should not value life so casually that we use the seeds of the next generation simply as tools for the benefit of the current generation.

EMBRYONIC STEM CELL RESEARCH

"As a result of private research, more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines already exist.. . I have concluded that we should allow federal funds to be used for research on these existing stem cell lines – where the life and death decision has already been made.. . This allows us to explore the promise and potential of stem cell research – without crossing a fundamental moral line by providing taxpayer funding that would sanction or encourage further destruction of human embryos that have at least the potential for life."
-- George W. Bush

% Federal funding of research using existing embryonic stem cell lines is consistent with the President's belief in the fundamental value and sanctity of human life. The President's decision reflects his fundamental commitment to preserving the value and sanctity of human life and his desire to promote vital medical research. The President's decision will permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but will not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional human embryos. The embryos from which the existing stem cell lines were created have already been destroyed and no longer have the possibility of further development as human beings. Federal funding of medical research on these existing stem cell lines will promote the sanctity of life – without undermining it – and will allow scientists to explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying diseases.

% Federal funds will only be used for research on existing stem cell lines that were derived: (1) with the informed consent of the donors; (2) from excess embryos created solely for reproductive purposes; and (3) without any financial inducements to the donors. In order to ensure that federal funds are used to support only stem cell research that is scientifically sound, legal, and ethical, the NIH will examine the derivation of all existing stem cell lines and create a registry of those lines that satisfy this criteria. More than 60 existing stem cell lines from genetically diverse populations around the world are expected to be available for federally-funded research.

% No federal funds will be used for: (1) the derivation or use of stem cell lines derived from newly destroyed embryos ; (2) the creation of any human embryos for research purposes; or (3) the cloning of human embryos for any purpose. Today's decision relates only to the use of federal funds for research on existing stem cell lines derived in accordance with the criteria set forth above.

% The President will create a new President's Council on Bioethics, chaired by Dr. Leon Kass, an expert in biomedical ethics and a professor at the University of Chicago, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behaviorial science and technology. The Council will study such issues as embryo and stem cell research, assisted reproduction, cloning, genetic screening, gene therapy, euthanasia, psychoactive drugs, and brain implants.

BACKGROUND

% Embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells, which come from the inner cell mass of a human embryo, have the potential to develop into all or nearly all of the tissues in the body. The scientific term for this characteristic is "pluripotentiality."

% Adult stem cells. Adult stem cells are unspecialized, can renew themselves, and can become specialized to yield all of the cell types of the tissue from which they originate. Although scientists believe that some adult stem cells from one tissue can develop into cells of another tissue, no adult stem cell has been shown in culture to be pluripotent.

% The potential of embryonic stem cell research. Many scientists believe that embryonic stem cell research may eventually lead to therapies that could be used to treat diseases that afflict approximately 128 million Americans. Treatments may include replacing destroyed dopamine-secreting neurons in a Parkinson's patient's brain; transplanting insulin-producing pancreatic beta cells in diabetic patients; and infusing cardiac muscle cells in a heart damaged by myocardial infarction. Embryonic stem cells may also be used to understand basic biology and to evaluate the safety and efficacy of new medicines.

% The creation of embryonic stem cells. To create embryonic stem cells for research, a "stem cell line" must be created from the inner cell mass of a week-old embryo. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells can grow and divide indefinitely. A stem cell line is a mass of cells descended from the original, sharing its genetic characteristics. Batches of cells can then be separated from the cell line and distributed to researchers.

% The origin of embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells are derived from excess embryos created in the course of infertility treatment. As a result of standard in vitro fertilization practices, many excess human embryos are created. Participants in IVF treatment must ultimately decide the disposition of these excess embryos, and many individuals have donated their excess embryos for research purposes.

% Existing stem cell lines. There are currently more than 60 existing different human embryonic stem cell lines that have been developed from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization with the consent of the donors and without financial inducement. These existing lines are used in approximately one dozen laboratories around the world (in the United States, Australia, India, Israel, and Sweden).

% Therapies from adult and embryonic stem cell research. To date, adult stem cell research, which is federally-funded, has resulted in the development of a variety of therapeutic treatments for diseases. Although embryonic stem cell research has not yet produced similar results, many scientists believe embryonic stem cell research holds promise over time because of the capacity of embryonic stem cells to develop into any tissue in the human body.

Questions and Answers

Stem Cell Q&A

1. Isn't this a reversal of the position President Bush took in his campaign and in a letter as recently as May 18? Didn't he say unequivocally that he "oppose[s] Federal funding for stem-cell research that involves destroying living human embryos"?

The President has always believed that human life is sacred. He has never retreated from that position, either as governor of Texas, during his campaign for President, or as President. And he does not retreat from that position today with his decision to permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines, where the life and death decision has already been made. At the same time, he is unwilling to direct taxpayer funds for research on stem cell lines that have not yet been derived, because that might encourage the destruction of additional embryos.

Embryonic stem cell research raises profound medical and ethical questions, questions about which the President has thought deeply. After long reflection, he has come to the conclusion that supporting this research using existing stem cell lines, which has the potential to save millions and millions of lives, is consistent with his personal pro-life beliefs.

2. The President said that he would name a Presidential Council to study this issue. What will the Commission's mandate be?

The President's Council on Bioethics, which will be chaired by Dr. Leon Kass of the University of Chicago will monitor embryonic stem cell research and study the human and moral meaning of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

3. Does this mean that the federal government will start regulating fertility clinics?

Additional federal oversight of the embryo donation process may be necessary. Since the NIH will need to ensure that fertility clinics obtain consent from embryo donors and carry out embryo donors' decisions, some federal supervision of these facilities may be appropriate.

4. How soon will scientists receive money for research on embryonic stem cells?

The NIH will begin working immediately on the creation of a registry of existing stem cell lines that meet three essential criteria:

- The embryos' donors' consent must be fully informed;
- The stem cell lines must be derived from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization, not for research purposes.
- The embryo donation must have been made without any financial inducement.

5. The Dickey amendment says that federal funds cannot be spent on "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed [or] discarded." Does this law permit the funding of stem cell research?

The Dickey appropriations rider prohibits the use of federal funds for "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed, discarded, or knowingly subjected to risk of injury or death greater than that allowed for research on fetuses in utero." The research that the President has agreed to fund (using existing stem cell lines where the life and death decisions have already been made) does not violate the Dickey amendment. No Federal funds will be used for the destruction of human embryos or the derivation of stem cells, and no Federal funds will be used for research on stem cell lines created from human embryos that are alive as of this date.

6. Couldn't excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization be donated to a woman who would have them implanted, so that they may become babies?

The disposition of excess embryos created in the course of in vitro treatment is a private decision for the participants in that treatment. The participants may choose to donate their excess embryos to another woman or couple, to have them destroyed, or to donate them to research.

9. How are embryonic stem cells derived?

To derive embryonic stem cells for research, a researcher removes the inner cell mass from a week-old embryo. The embryo at this stage is about 100 cells in size and is barely visible to the naked eye. The removal of the inner cell mass destroys the embryo. The stem cells are then cultured, or grown, under special conditions in the laboratory. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells will grow and divide (perhaps) indefinitely. These potentially immortal cultures are known as "stem cell lines."

10. Why can't the government simply fund adult stem cell research?

Although stem cells can also be derived from adult tissues, many scientists believe that, unlike embryonic stem cells, adult stem cells are not pluripotent (meaning they do not have the ability to develop into all the different types of human tissue). Thus, most scientists believe that adult stem cells are not as promising an avenue for treating and preventing disease as embryonic stem cells.

12. Won't this approach bless the destruction of human life by allowing us to profit from morally disturbing research?

There are several important medical therapies, including the chicken pox vaccine, the rabies vaccine, and the Hepatitis A vaccine, that have been derived from fetal tissue, including in some instances aborted fetuses. Although many people have very strong moral objections to abortions, most people do not shun these important vaccines.

13. What is the President's response to the disease sufferers who might have benefited from additional research?

While there is certainly great hope for successful cures and therapies from embryonic stem cell research, the reality is that medical realities often do not live up to their expectations. Eight years ago, there was great enthusiasm over fetal tissue research, yet to date, the promise of such research has not fulfilled its expectations. . By funding research on more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines, the President believes, based on conversations with some of the nation's leading scientists, that we will be able to fully explore the promise and potential of embryonic stem cell research.

14. How do we know there are 60? Where do they come from? Who owns patents?

    The NIH has been reviewing the state of stem cell science and they have reported that there are now more than 60 identifiable stem cell lines that have been created from excess embryos produced for in vitro fertilization and without any financial inducements to the donors. The NIH is looking into the patents and will obviously be engaged in negotiating material transfer agreements with the holders of the relevant patents.

15. Won't these embryos be destroyed anyway?

    Although many of these embryos may well be destroyed, the fact that a life is going to end does not justify actively terminating it. We should not value life so casually that we use the seeds of the next generation simply as tools for the benefit of the current generation.

EMBRYONIC STEM CELL RESEARCH

"As a result of private research, more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines already exist.. . I have concluded that we should allow federal funds to be used for research on these existing stem cell lines – where the life and death decision has already been made.. . This allows us to explore the promise and potential of stem cell research – without crossing a fundamental moral line by providing taxpayer funding that would sanction or encourage further destruction of human embryos that have at least the potential for life."
-- George W. Bush

% Federal funding of research using existing embryonic stem cell lines is consistent with the President's belief in the fundamental value and sanctity of human life. The President's decision reflects his fundamental commitment to preserving the value and sanctity of human life and his desire to promote vital medical research. The President's decision will permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines that have already been derived, but will not sanction or encourage the destruction of additional human embryos. The embryos from which the existing stem cell lines were created have already been destroyed and no longer have the possibility of further development as human beings. Federal funding of medical research on these existing stem cell lines will promote the sanctity of life – without undermining it – and will allow scientists to explore the potential of this research to benefit the lives of millions of people who suffer from life destroying diseases.

% Federal funds will only be used for research on existing stem cell lines that were derived: (1) with the informed consent of the donors; (2) from excess embryos created solely for reproductive purposes; and (3) without any financial inducements to the donors. In order to ensure that federal funds are used to support only stem cell research that is scientifically sound, legal, and ethical, the NIH will examine the derivation of all existing stem cell lines and create a registry of those lines that satisfy this criteria. More than 60 existing stem cell lines from genetically diverse populations around the world are expected to be available for federally-funded research.

% No federal funds will be used for: (1) the derivation or use of stem cell lines derived from newly destroyed embryos ; (2) the creation of any human embryos for research purposes; or (3) the cloning of human embryos for any purpose. Today's decision relates only to the use of federal funds for research on existing stem cell lines derived in accordance with the criteria set forth above.

% The President will create a new President's Council on Bioethics, chaired by Dr. Leon Kass, an expert in biomedical ethics and a professor at the University of Chicago, to study the human and moral ramifications of developments in biomedical and behaviorial science and technology. The Council will study such issues as embryo and stem cell research, assisted reproduction, cloning, genetic screening, gene therapy, euthanasia, psychoactive drugs, and brain implants.

BACKGROUND

% Embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells, which come from the inner cell mass of a human embryo, have the potential to develop into all or nearly all of the tissues in the body. The scientific term for this characteristic is "pluripotentiality."

% Adult stem cells. Adult stem cells are unspecialized, can renew themselves, and can become specialized to yield all of the cell types of the tissue from which they originate. Although scientists believe that some adult stem cells from one tissue can develop into cells of another tissue, no adult stem cell has been shown in culture to be pluripotent.

% The potential of embryonic stem cell research. Many scientists believe that embryonic stem cell research may eventually lead to therapies that could be used to treat diseases that afflict approximately 128 million Americans. Treatments may include replacing destroyed dopamine-secreting neurons in a Parkinson's patient's brain; transplanting insulin-producing pancreatic beta cells in diabetic patients; and infusing cardiac muscle cells in a heart damaged by myocardial infarction. Embryonic stem cells may also be used to understand basic biology and to evaluate the safety and efficacy of new medicines.

% The creation of embryonic stem cells. To create embryonic stem cells for research, a "stem cell line" must be created from the inner cell mass of a week-old embryo. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells can grow and divide indefinitely. A stem cell line is a mass of cells descended from the original, sharing its genetic characteristics. Batches of cells can then be separated from the cell line and distributed to researchers.

% The origin of embryonic stem cells. Embryonic stem cells are derived from excess embryos created in the course of infertility treatment. As a result of standard in vitro fertilization practices, many excess human embryos are created. Participants in IVF treatment must ultimately decide the disposition of these excess embryos, and many individuals have donated their excess embryos for research purposes.

% Existing stem cell lines. There are currently more than 60 existing different human embryonic stem cell lines that have been developed from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization with the consent of the donors and without financial inducement. These existing lines are used in approximately one dozen laboratories around the world (in the United States, Australia, India, Israel, and Sweden).

% Therapies from adult and embryonic stem cell research. To date, adult stem cell research, which is federally-funded, has resulted in the development of a variety of therapeutic treatments for diseases. Although embryonic stem cell research has not yet produced similar results, many scientists believe embryonic stem cell research holds promise over time because of the capacity of embryonic stem cells to develop into any tissue in the human body.

Questions and Answers

Stem Cell Q&A

1. Isn't this a reversal of the position President Bush took in his campaign and in a letter as recently as May 18? Didn't he say unequivocally that he "oppose[s] Federal funding for stem-cell research that involves destroying living human embryos"?

The President has always believed that human life is sacred. He has never retreated from that position, either as governor of Texas, during his campaign for President, or as President. And he does not retreat from that position today with his decision to permit federal funding of research using the more than 60 existing stem cell lines, where the life and death decision has already been made. At the same time, he is unwilling to direct taxpayer funds for research on stem cell lines that have not yet been derived, because that might encourage the destruction of additional embryos.

Embryonic stem cell research raises profound medical and ethical questions, questions about which the President has thought deeply. After long reflection, he has come to the conclusion that supporting this research using existing stem cell lines, which has the potential to save millions and millions of lives, is consistent with his personal pro-life beliefs.

2. The President said that he would name a Presidential Council to study this issue. What will the Commission's mandate be?

The President's Council on Bioethics, which will be chaired by Dr. Leon Kass of the University of Chicago will monitor embryonic stem cell research and study the human and moral meaning of developments in biomedical and behavioral science and technology.

3. Does this mean that the federal government will start regulating fertility clinics?

Additional federal oversight of the embryo donation process may be necessary. Since the NIH will need to ensure that fertility clinics obtain consent from embryo donors and carry out embryo donors' decisions, some federal supervision of these facilities may be appropriate.

4. How soon will scientists receive money for research on embryonic stem cells?

The NIH will begin working immediately on the creation of a registry of existing stem cell lines that meet three essential criteria:

- The embryos' donors' consent must be fully informed;
- The stem cell lines must be derived from excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization, not for research purposes.
- The embryo donation must have been made without any financial inducement.

5. The Dickey amendment says that federal funds cannot be spent on "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed [or] discarded." Does this law permit the funding of stem cell research?

The Dickey appropriations rider prohibits the use of federal funds for "research in which a human embryo or embryos are destroyed, discarded, or knowingly subjected to risk of injury or death greater than that allowed for research on fetuses in utero." The research that the President has agreed to fund (using existing stem cell lines where the life and death decisions have already been made) does not violate the Dickey amendment. No Federal funds will be used for the destruction of human embryos or the derivation of stem cells, and no Federal funds will be used for research on stem cell lines created from human embryos that are alive as of this date.

6. Couldn't excess embryos created for in vitro fertilization be donated to a woman who would have them implanted, so that they may become babies?

The disposition of excess embryos created in the course of in vitro treatment is a private decision for the participants in that treatment. The participants may choose to donate their excess embryos to another woman or couple, to have them destroyed, or to donate them to research.

9. How are embryonic stem cells derived?

To derive embryonic stem cells for research, a researcher removes the inner cell mass from a week-old embryo. The embryo at this stage is about 100 cells in size and is barely visible to the naked eye. The removal of the inner cell mass destroys the embryo. The stem cells are then cultured, or grown, under special conditions in the laboratory. If they are cultured properly, embryonic stem cells will grow and divide (perhaps) indefinitely. These potentially immortal cultures are known as "stem cell lines."

10. Why can't the government simply fund adult stem cell research?

Although stem cells can also be derived from adult tissues, many scientists believe that, unlike embryonic stem cells, adult stem cells are not pluripotent (meaning they do not have the ability to develop into all the different types of human tissue). Thus, most scientists believe that adult stem cells are not as promising an avenue for treating and preventing disease as embryonic stem cells.

12. Won't this approach bless the destruction of human life by allowing us to profit from morally disturbing research?

There are several important medical therapies, including the chicken pox vaccine, the rabies vaccine, and the Hepatitis A vaccine, that have been derived from fetal tissue, including in some instances aborted fetuses. Although many people have very strong moral objections to abortions, most people do not shun these important vaccines.

13. What is the President's response to the disease sufferers who might have benefited from additional research?

While there is certainly great hope for successful cures and therapies from embryonic stem cell research, the reality is that medical realities often do not live up to their expectations. Eight years ago, there was great enthusiasm over fetal tissue research, yet to date, the promise of such research has not fulfilled its expectations. . By funding research on more than 60 genetically diverse stem cell lines, the President believes, based on conversations with some of the nation's leading scientists, that we will be able to fully explore the promise and potential of embryonic stem cell research.

14. How do we know there are 60? Where do they come from? Who owns patents?

    The NIH has been reviewing the state of stem cell science and they have reported that there are now more than 60 identifiable stem cell lines that have been created from excess embryos produced for in vitro fertilization and without any financial inducements to the donors. The NIH is looking into the patents and will obviously be engaged in negotiating material transfer agreements with the holders of the relevant patents.

15. Won't these embryos be destroyed anyway?

    Although many of these embryos may well be destroyed, the fact that a life is going to end does not justify actively terminating it. We should not value life so casually that we use the seeds of the next generation simply as tools for the benefit of the current generation.

Attached please find a revised VA report in which VA defers to DoD on H.R. 1724. The bill would recognize the service of members of the U.S. Cadet Nurse Corps as active military service for the purpose of laws administered by VA. A previous version of this report in which VA stated that they "do not support" the bill was circulated on July 27 (LRM #ALA9). A copy of the bill is also attached. Please respond by 5:00 p.m., Wednesday, August 8. Thank you.

THE SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS
WASHINGTON

The Honorable Bob Stump
Chairman
House Committee on Armed Services
United States House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515-6035

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As requested, I am writing to express the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on H.R. 1724, the "United States Cadet Nurse Corps Equity Act of 2001." This legislation would provide that service of the members of the United States Cadet Nurse Corps during World War II constituted active military service for purposes of laws administered by VA. For the reasons discussed below, we defer to the views of the Secretary of Defense.

Congress has already provided an opportunity for organizations like the United States Cadet Nurse Corps to seek recognition of their service as active military service. Under Public Law No. 95-202, §401, 91 Stat. 1433, 1449 (1977), the Department of Defense (DoD) has authority to determine whether service rendered by a civilian or a group of civilians may be considered active duty for purposes of all laws administered by VA. In order to receive recognition by DoD, the members of such a group must have rendered service to the United States Armed Forces in a capacity considered civilian employment or contractual service at the time such service was rendered. Moreover, the Secretary of Defense acting through the Secretary of the Air Force must determine, after consideration of various factors and a thorough review of all available evidence pertaining to the service of any such group, that the service of such group should be considered active military service. Applications for recognition of the service of particular groups are considered by DoD's Civilian/Military Service Review Board under procedures found in title 32, Code of Federal Regulations, Part 47. Those regulations explain the application process and where to file a completed application.

In consideration of these facts, VA defers to the views of the Secretary of Defense concerning enactment of H.R. 1724.

I. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

BACKGROUND

The following report to Congress incorporates and synthesizes the findings of a separately commissioned Building Evaluation Report and Feasibility study for the renovation of the Lafayette Building. Congress has directed the General Services Administration (GSA) to work with the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) and the Export-Import Bank of the United States (Export-Import Bank) to develop a renovation plan considering all alternatives authorized by law for the Lafayette Building.

The 12-story, 559,875 gross square foot Lafayette Building was constructed in 1940 in a unique, angled shape that creates irregular and inefficient areas. A top-tier location in the heart of Washington's vibrant central business district makes the building a premier federally owned facility. The building is under the control and jurisdiction of GSA. The VA Occupies 60% of the building and the Export-Import Bank occupies 40%. After 60 years in use, the building needs a complete renovation to provide modern, efficient office space for the federal workforce and to maintain the building's competitive position within the marketplace. A recent study by an outside consultant recommends a single-phase renovation project, estimated to cost $70 million (in 2001 dollars). The renovation study states that the building exhibits a pressing need of general upgrading and refurbishment, including more efficient heating, ventilating, and air conditioning systems, new lighting, an up-to-date system of power and telecommunications distribution, energy-efficient fenestration, and restoration and/or replacement of interior finishes.

FUNDING OPTIONS

This report considers three methods of funding the proposed renovation of the building. The first funding option is through traditional congressional appropriation. The second funding option is through the use of a Public/Private Partnership between the government and a private entity. GSA does not have this authority at this time, so the Public/Private analysis is modeled in accordance with what GSA believes would be required to induce private sector participation in this venture under current market conditions. The third funding alternative is enhanced-use leasing, authorized for the Department of Veterans Affairs to use for its own properties.

RECOMMENDATION

After completing an analysis of the three funding alternatives, GSA recommends proceeding with the Lafayette Building renovation through direct congressional appropriation. This funding option returns the highest Net Present Value (NPV) to the Government among all the alternatives studied. Net Present Value is defined as the cumulative present value of all future cash inflows and outflows. The NPV, excluding costs associated with swing space,[1] is $168 million for traditional funding compared to a 30-year Public/Private Partnership NPV of $51 million. One of the primary reasons that congressional funding provides the highest NPV to the government is that in a Public/Private Partnership, GSA would be required to share the cash flow with a private partner, while in direct congressional appropriation GSA retains all excess cash flow. However, since GSA renovation projects must compete for scarce funding and the so many of GSA's buildings need extensive renovations, alternative funding via some kind of Public/Private Partnership presents the next best alternative.

REV_00130801

PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP OPTION

Public/Private Partnerships for this renovation are defined by having a private entity fund the renovation and the government leasing back the asset to compensate for the private funds expended. After a negotiated period or set rate of return, GSA shares in the revenue. Public/Private Partnerships can be structured in many forms. For analysis purposees, GSA has selected a generic partnership form with the following elements:

(1) GSA retains ownership,

(2) the partner brings all the money necessary to modernize the building,

(3) GSA has 49% equity in the project,

(4) GSA occupies the building in entirety and

(5) the developer receives a market rate of return on its investment.

We have selected this form because it is appropriate for the situation and GSA receives a return on its 49% equity position.

The Public/Private Partnership will yield the government a lower overall NPV, but reduces the overall risk the government has towards the renovation. In this case, the economics show that a Public/Private Partnership is more expensive than direct federal funding, but cheaper than leasing space for the tenants. The private partner would bear all risk associated with completing and financing the renovation and would then share in the profits over the period of the master property lease. The master property least would typically last from 30 to 75 years. At the end of the master property lease, the government would retain 100% ownership of the land and building. Public/Private Partnership legislation has yet to be approved; thus this option was modeled based on assumptions and not actual guidelines.

Generally, Public/Private Partnerships as a vehicle for obtaining private financing of Federal construction and repair projects are not recommended because private financing is more expensive to the Federal taxpayer than Government-finance. Still, with so many federal buildings in need of modernization, Public/Private Partnerships can make business sense when PBS is unable to get timely funding for a federal building modernization project. Although PBS has no authority now to do a Public/Private Partnership, a Public/Private Partnership would be useful if money continues to be scarce.

ADDITIONAL FUNDING OPTION – ENHANCED-USE LEASING

This option is not authorized, as VA does not own the building. Also, the VA authority is for underutilized facilities (an example is excess land adjoining a VA facility), so the renovation of the Lafayette building does not meet this criterion. Finally, the scope of this renovation is much larger than all previous projects the VA has completed with its enhanced-use leasing authority. As a footnote to enhanced-use leasing, the size and scale of the renovation requires an experienced entity with the expertise to deal with the complexity of the project, such as GSA's Public Buildings Service.

APPENDICES

The appendices to this report present key findings including: financial results for direct congressional appropriation and private equity joint venture scenarios, benefits and drawbacks to each method, occupancy costs to the tenants, and an analysis to determine the least costly alternative to the government over a 30-year period among leasing, building and renovation.

REV_00130803

II. APPENDIX A - DISCUSSION OF BUILDING DEVELOPMENT PLAN, MARKET, AND MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

EXISTING BUILDING AND PROPOSED REDEVELOPMENT PLAN:

The Lafayette Building was completed in 1940 and enjoys a premier location in Washington's central business district. It is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. The building has primary northwest frontage along Vermont Avenue. Eye Street borders to the north, 15th Street to the east and H Street to the south. The Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank currently occupy the building, along with a small GSA-PBS field office. Many of the original systems and construction remain, making the building obsolete by today's standards.

The building consists of basement and ground floors, as well as floors one through twelve. The building is 559,875 gross square feet and approximately 313,112 rentable square feet. The proposed renovation assumes two concepts:

- The first renovation concept maintains the building in its current configuration and preserving all of the historically significant interior corridors and other interior spaces. There is no gain in square footage, with both tenants maintaining the same space allocation.

- The second renovation concept will add substantial useable square footage (47,500 square feet) due to removal of historic corridors in some areas. The rentable to useable ratio will improve to a level of 1.24. The total renovation cost is estimated at $69.2 million (2001 dollars) or $124 per gross square foot for concept one and $69.1 million (2001 dollars) or $123 per gross square foot for concept two. The improvements will bring the building up to modern office building standards.

DESIGN OF THE BUILDING:

The Lafayette Building is of a unique shape and features massive walls and partitions. Its bay sizes are narrow and the overall configuration has sharply angled floors that create irregular, inefficient areas.

The Lafayette Building requires substantial renovation to bring the building up to current modern office building standards. New and efficient mechanical systems should be installed, along with replacing the current electrical system. The building also needs to be brought into compliance with disability access requirements, asbestos needs to be removed, and finishes require refurbishment. Replacement of the single-glazed windows will improve the building's energy efficiency. Because of its historical significance, the renovation will preserve the original design to the maximum extent feasible.[2]

[2] Note – some GSA initiatives, such as Sustainability ("Building Green"), Design Excellence and Construction Excellence measures, and level-4 security measures such as Blast-proofing and Glass Fragmentation were not included in the MAP feasibility report.

The first renovation concept will maintain the building in its current configuration and preserve all of the historically significant interior corridors and spaces. Restrooms and stairs would be rehabilitated, and only areas designated as renovation zones would be altered in more substantial ways to meet the needs of the two tenants. The second concept allows greater flexibility with respect to space planning within the office interiors by removing corridors in some areas even though they are considered historically significant. This will create more efficient layouts of workspace and offices. This concept also proposes some changes to the existing interiors to recapture space to use for mechanical equipment, utility closets and office space.

The models assume concept two and that zoning and historic preservation approval enabling the renovation of space noted above is obtained.

SUBMARKET OVERVIEW:

According to AEW Research, the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area is in its tenth year of a real estate cycle upswing. The regional market encompasses approximately 275 million square feet of space, making it the second largest office market in the country. The metro area's direct vacancy rate at the end of 2000 was 3.6%. The only other major U.S. markets that rival Washington's vacancy rate are Boston and San Francisco. Over 100 million square feet of office space is located within the District of Columbia, and demand for both Class A and Class B/C space has been strong, causing rental rates to increase significantly. Over the next five years, office employment is predicted to increase at close to 1.7% per year, which should support continued (albeit slower) absorption.

The Lafayette Building is located in the Central Business District (CBD) submarket, the largest of the seven submarkets within the District of Columbia. The area includes 36 million square feet of space, 85% of which is considered Class B/C space. Strong demand and moderate new construction in the area led to a sharp decline in vacancy rates, which fell from 10.6% in 1995 to 2.6% at the end of 2000. Rents rose 10% in 2000 to $42.50 per square foot for Class A space and $31.75 per square foot for Class B space, reflecting the tightening market conditions.

New supply is continuing to enter the market, prompted by a lack of large contiguous blocks of available space, robust absorption, rising rental rates and relatively low vacancy rates. Construction in the submarket is occurring at a fairly robust pace, although at considerably lower levels than one year ago. As of year-end 2000, there was 1.2 million square feet of space under construction or renovation according to Delta Associates. The recent economic slowdown is causing some planned developments to remain on hold.

Still, absorption has been equally strong. In 2000, 1.4 million square feet of space was absorbed. Anticipated absorption is expected to slow, but will continue to outpace deliveries of new space to the market, providing continued rate pressure through the next year. Beyond 2001, steady absorption and low vacancy rate should draw further new construction into the market, but not at levels that will push the market below strong/equilibrium conditions.

The factors affecting the District's ability to absorb space are expected to support continued positive market conditions. These factors include: the consistent performance of the business services sector; the continuation of a general turnaround and related ebb in the loss of population and increase in optimism in the city; and demand for office space supported by a plethora of policy organizations, trade associations and lobbying firms. The Lafayette Building is well located to benefit from these factors.

SPECIFIC PROPERTY MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

Construction Costs:	$69,181,936 – concept one; $69,121,367 – concept two
Government Equity:	$26,587,568
Private Partner Equity:	$27,672,775

Another $50 per square foot is applied to complete the renovation at the beginning of year 32. The amounts for capital improvements are in 2001 dollars.

KEY GENERAL MODELING ASSUMPTIONS:

The Lafayette Building has been modeled by Bolan Smart Associates according to the following general real estate assumptions.

III. APPENDIX B - DISCUSSION AND SUPPORTING ANALYSIS

OWNER AND TENANT RESULTS UNDER THE CAPITAL FUNDING OPTIONS

The Lafayette Building benefits from its excellent location on Lafayette Square with views of the White House. The property's premier location and strength of the local real estate market should serve to make the renovation financially successful through direct funding, and would attract significant interest from the private sector if a Public/Private Partnership funding option were to be considered. A complete renovation would substantially increase the appeal and long-term viability of the Lafayette Building.

The financial models included in this report analyze the following scenarios: (1) the government as sole holder under traditional prospectus funding and (2) the government as minority partner to a private sector developer/partner. This analysis assumes that a separate scenario modeled under enhanced-use lease authority will result in no difference from the Public/Private model results. All discussion about the Public/Private scenario applies to the enhanced-use scenario as well.

The identical results are due to the fact that enhanced-use leasing shares many of the same characteristics with public/private financing in that both scenarios involve accessing private sector equity capital, either equity or bond financing. Neither alternative will have an economic advantage over the other for purposes of renovating the Lafayette Building. Risk levels and required rates of return in the private capital markets are similar under both scenarios, consequently, no other scenario will be able to obtain a lower capital cost structure in the private capital markets.

SUMMARY OF OWNER'S FINANCIAL RETURNS

The following tables present the projected internal rates of return (IRR) for the building renovation of the Lafayette building under the two capital funding options. The Prospectus-level funding models are presented in two scenarios: one includes swing space expenses and the other model omits swing space expenses. Excluding swing space costs most accurately reflects a private sector equity partner deal and thus provides a more accurate comparison to a true market deal. The privately financed models are for both 30 and 50 years.

Return (IRR) Summary – Traditional Funding and Public/Private*

Partner	Traditional with Swing Space Expense	Traditional – No Swing Space Expense	Public / Private 30 Year	Public / Private 50 Year
Government	13.95%	19.81%	19.61%	19.92%
Private Partner	N/A	N/A	23.37%	23.50%

* Prospectus-level funding models assume no leverage.

The following tables present the projected net present values for the government and private equity partner over a 30 and 50-year master property lease assumption:

Net Present Value (NPV) Summary – Traditional Funding and Public/Private*

Partner	Traditional with Swing Space Expense	Traditional – No Swing Space Expense	Public / Private 30 Year	Public / Private 50 Year
Government @ 6.3%	$127,200,479	$168,035,353	$50,817,192	$68,975,447
Private Partner @ 6.3%	N/A	N/A	$56,698,479	$69,157,435
Private Partner @ 12.0%	N/A	N/A	$22,586,216	$24,716,755

* Prospectus-level funding models assume no leverage.

The overall returns and net present value to the government vary between the two funding scenarios, due to varying equity contributions and a debt provider in the private scenario that receives annual payments. Both the traditional and private scenarios offer benefits and drawbacks. In the traditional funding method, the government will be responsible for the entire renovation cash outlay and will assume all development and construction risk. Positive benefits to this scenario include the government having total control over all decisions affecting the building, along with GSA receiving 100% of the net cash flow generated and any upside associated with the operation of the building. A private equity partner focused solely on real estate management could potentially offer an additional financial benefit to the government by way of efficient management and thorough real estate operating knowledge. However, as GSA also has experience, our benefit from utilizing a private partner in this area would be marginal.

REV_00130808

The Public/Private Partnership alternative can be constructed for the Lafayette Building so as to respond to scoring rules under capital lease or lease-purchase definitions. Should GSA be given congressional authority to enter into Public/Private Partnerships, the authority would specify how the scoring issue is resolved. A Public/Private Partnership would be the higher cost alternative in Present Value terms compared to the direct funding model. The higher cost is attributable to the lower costs of federal funds for construction. Nonetheless, a Public/Private Partnership alternative can be a valuable resource to leverage scarce capital investment dollars to allow more renovations of federal buildings in strong real estate markets.

GSA also considers total overall cost to the government according to three different scenarios: leasing, building and renovation. The results differ from the models in this analysis because they are totally expense driven and not return driven. The following table summarizes the results from the cost analysis, and indicates that renovation would be the least costly alternative to the government when compared to building new or leasing. Total present value cost represents the total overall cost to the government over a 30-year period, including operating expenses.

Total Present Value Cost Analysis

Scenario	Total Present Value Cost *
Lease	$261,801,000
Build	$206,661,000
Renovate	$196,462,000

* Assumes a government discount rate of 5.3%

Joint venture private financing also provides benefits and drawbacks for the government. Benefits include no initial cash outlay, only an imputed value of the government's partnership capital is contributed. Additionally, the government bears none of the risk associated with the renovation. The developer partner will obtain construction financing and will be responsible for payment of the loan upon stabilization. Lastly, the government will retain 100% ownership of the Lafayette Building upon expiration of the master property lease. Drawbacks include a possible disproportionate share of net cash flows based upon the ultimate structure of the transaction, along with the lack of total control over renovation, construction and ultimate operation of the building.

Prior models assumed that a market rental rate will be paid by the tenants of the building. For comparison purposes, the following analysis considers the rent levels needed to reflect the cost of modernizing the space under direct federal funding and Public/Private Partnership. The imputed land and building values were removed from the analysis. Under the Private/Public Partnership option the private entity is limited to a maximum 20% return. The analysis seeks the rent needed to be in equilibrium to attain the desired hurdle rate and where the Net Present Value equals 0. The imputed federal rate is 6.3% for the analysis.

Stripped Comparison Rent Cost w/o Imputed Land And Building Values

	Base Rent (RSF)	Operating Expenses	Total
Direct Federal Funding	$11.19	$8.79	$19.98
Public/Private Partnership	$26.60	$8.79	$35.39

The direct federal funding method requires a full service rent of $19.33 to cover the expenses of renovating the Lafayette building. The Public/Private Partnership option requires a full service rent of $35.39 per RSF to provide a 20% IRR to the private sector partner.

The following analysis considers only the present value of the modernization costs for the two options. There are no imputed land or building values or operating expenses used in the analysis. It shows that Direct Federal Funding is the low cost alternative to acquire modernized space for the tenants.

Stripped PV cost w/o operating expense costs.

	Present Value [1]
Direct Federal Funding	$83,291,000
Public/Private Partnership	$91,833,430

[1] Present Value based on 6.3%.

The following table summarizes benefits and drawbacks to the government under both scenarios:

Capital Funding Options Benefits and Drawbacks – Owner/Equity Partner

	Traditional Funding	Public/Private Partnership
Development/Construction Risk	Neutral[2]	Benefit
Capital Investment	Neutral[3]	Benefit
Operating Control	Benefit	Drawback
Ownership	—	—
Cost of Financing	Benefit	Drawback
Total Capital Investment (Budget Authority)[1]	$69 million	$0

[1]Excludes move and relocation costs of $12.2 million.

[2]Depending on the construction contracting method, the government can reduce risk. For example, construction risk can be minimized by the design-bid-build method.

[3]The Public/Private Partnership would allow GSA to leverage its limited capital investment dollars to modernize a larger number of federal buildings.

REV_00130810

SUMMARY OF TENANT EXPENSES

The two primary tenants of the Lafayette Building [the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank] will face increased occupancy costs following renovation of the building that will bring it up to Class A-/B+ standards. Whether GSA or a private equity partner renovates the building, the rents will be marked-to-market.

The following table presents the current rent, net of expenses, paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Export-Import Bank, and what they can expect to pay in market rent (2001 dollars) after renovation is complete.

Tenant Occupancy Cost Analysis

Tenant	Current Rent per Useable Square Foot[1]	Rent per Useable Square Foot after Renovation[2]	Difference
VA	$30.00	$57.40	$27.40
Ex-Im Bank	$30.00	$57.40	$27.40

[1]Equivalent rate per RSF = $20.98
[2]Equivalent rate per RSF = $46.38

Total rental payments over a five-year period are presented in the table below. The figures are presented as a status quo scenario, in which the current tenants remain in the building, and as a renovation scenario in which the tenants return to the building after renovation is complete. During the three years the Lafayette Building is being renovated, the tenants will move into comparable office space in a different building, known as swing space. Swing space rent will be more expensive than current rent paid today, as the tenants will be charged market rent plus a premium for the short lease duration.

The following table presents total occupancy costs over a five-year period. The costs are presented in two scenarios: (1) assuming no renovation is undertaken and (2) assuming the renovation is completed. For comparison purposes, the occupancy costs for the renovation scenario are presented with 2001 rental rates and with the same square footage assumptions as the status quo scenario.

Total Five Year Occupancy Cost Analysis

Tenant	5-Year Rent Expense under Status Quo Scenario (1)	5-Year Rent Expense under Concept Two Scenario (2)	Difference (In dollars and percent)
VA	$27,078,811	$50,217,289	$23,138,478	85.4%
Ex-Im Bank	$18,782,952	$34,832,731	$16,049,779	85.4%

Note: Useable square footage is based on Lafayette Renovation feasibility report (dated 5/17/01) of approximately 169,000 usf for VA and 117,000 usf for Ex-Im Bank. Rental rates are based on the Bolan Smart financial analysis (see MAP feasibility report, dated 5/17/01). For comparison purposes, we have assumed the same square footage and rental rates in 2001 dollars.

The average annual difference is $4.6 million for the VA and $3.2 million for the Ex-Im Bank, with average annual percentage increases of 17.1%. The market rate presented in this report is indicative of current Class A-/B+ rates for a building with a location similar to the Lafayette Building. Current economic conditions are affecting the real estate market, causing increased vacancies in some submarkets and easing upward pressure on rents. Thus, the rental rates presented may not be indicative of market rates at the time of occupancy, but are best estimates given recent market performance.

The renovation of the Lafayette Building will have a direct impact on certain relocation and moving expenses. The following table presents all move and relocation costs associated with the renovation and the party, or parties, responsible for these costs under the scenario presented in this report.

Move and Relocation Costs[1]

Expense	Amount[1]	Date Incurred	Responsibility
Initial Move Cost	$4,795,916	2005	Agency[2]
Swing Space Costs	$46.20 per sf	2005-2007	Agency –
Move Back Costs	$7,516,453	2008	Agency
Tenant Improvements	$13,528,218	2007	GSA/Private Partner

[1]Costs are based on Concept Two scenario (from MAP feasibility study dated 5/17/01).
[2]See Appendix A - General Modeling Assumptions, move costs.

Under GSA pricing policy, the tenant is responsible for move and swing space costs. GSA provides a base general allowance of $31.92 per useable square foot for tenant improvements and assigns each agency a "tier" level for additional tenant improvements. The VA and Export-Import are both assigned a Level 2 tier for improvements, representing a 20% premium above base levels. Upon returning to the Lafayette Building, the tenants will face higher occupancy costs, but will benefit from vastly improved space. The following table presents benefits and drawbacks to the tenants given a renovation of the Lafayette Building.

Tenant Benefits and Drawbacks of Renovation

Improved space	Benefit
More efficient space	Benefit
More overall space	Benefit
Complete systems upgrades	Benefit
Less expensive than permanently relocating to comparable building	Benefit
Short term move	Drawback

Note: The increase in leasing costs is not included as a benefit or drawback for the tenant, as it is a function of receiving higher quality space.

Both funding options present benefits and drawbacks to the government. As the owner, the best financial return from a net present value standpoint is to fund the renovation through direct federal funding. However, this requires a substantial capital outlay that must compete with other urgent federal modernization projects. The Public/Private Partnership program would allow the government to leverage its capital dollars to renovate its buildings. The Public/Private Partnership program is not necessarily a benefit to the government since it is a more expensive option than direct federal funding. However, PBS has so many buildings in dire need of modernization that the Public/Private Partnership program could at times be worth the additional cost to get and prevent further deterioration or solve an emergency problem. Both methods result in similar overall investment (IRR) returns of 19.8% for the federally funded project and 19.6% for the Public/Private Partnership.

From a tenant's standpoint, the benefits and drawbacks remain the same under either funding option. The tenants' occupancy costs (rent) will be marked to market for both direct and public/private funding so there is no net gain or loss to the tenants under either scenario.

IV. APPENDIX C - PARTNERSHIP FINANCIAL MODELS

CONSIDERATIONS TO PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP

The privately financed transaction presented in this report assumes the following capital structure, in order of priority:

- The government contributes an imputed capital account, equal to 49% of the overall equity required for renovation. The government then receives a 5% return on its imputed value. This return is most senior in the capital structure.

- Construction financing is obtained for 60% of the total cost of renovation. The loan is assumed to accrue interest at 7.5% annually, and will provide for full interest deferral and no amortization. Payoff of the loan is subordinate only to the government's return.

- A private equity partner is assumed to contribute the equity required to complete the renovation after construction debt is placed, which in this model is 40% of the total cost of renovation. The private partner will be due a preferred return of 11%, which is subordinate to payment of the debt and payment to the government.

- In the event of a capital event such as a refinancing, excess proceeds will be used to first pay any unpaid returns due to the above capital sources. After that, excess proceeds will be used to pay off the private equity partner's equity contribution. Assuming refinancing proceeds will fully retire the equity partner's contribution, the remaining excess proceeds will be split in accordance with the partners' overall interest.

- When the equity partner's contribution is fully retired, the preferred return will stop being paid.

- Any excess cash flow remaining after all of the above distributions are paid will be split in accordance with the corresponding equity contribution percentages.

This public/private analysis is similar to previous analysis prepared under a separate study for the GAO. The partnership analysis presented in this report also solves for the projected IRR and NPV for both the government and the private equity interests over the prescribed hold period.

If a public/private project were to be considered for the Lafayette Building, we believe the following conclusions represent an accurate indication of how the private sector would react:

- The private sector will base return thresholds on the probability of the current tenancy to execute commitments that they will sign a lease of at least 10 years and return to the Lafayette Building as soon as renovation is complete. We have assumed this scenario for the models in this report. If a commitment is obtained, the private sector will partner for returns in the upper teens. If a commitment is not obtained, private sector partners will require a higher return.

- A 30-year scenario for the private financing scenario is shorter than the private sector at large is accustomed to underwriting. Many private ground lease transactions involve terms of 75 to 99 years. However, the Lafayette Building's prominent location in the heart of Washington's central business district along with the implied safety of partnering with the government (and guaranteed return of current tenancy) will attract interest from the private sector. The structure of the transaction could be executed in a multitude of ways, and a shorter master property lease may be mitigated through increased private sector returns, for example. We believe the ability to flexibly structure a Public/Private Partnership will serve to attract interest from the private sector, though even higher interest could be generated with a longer term.

- A longer master property lease term enables a private equity partner to refinance the permanent debt multiple times, allowing them to recapture significant additional proceeds that boost overall returns. Longer terms would also serve to lower the private sector's focus on exit strategies, since typical private equity deals usually are for a maximum of ten years. Again, the overall deal could be structured in many ways that would alleviate much of the concern over master lease term since there are private equity participants that could underwrite a 'redevelop and hold' scenario.

- The recent slowdown in the national economy is affecting commercial real estate transactions. High yield equity participants have raised capital for investment, but are very selectively investing due to the economic uncertainty. The reduced amount of private equity participants could have an impact on the demand for this type of project. The high profile nature of the project and the attraction of partnering with the government will draw interest, although possibly at a somewhat lower level if current economic conditions persist.

- Favorable conditions in the debt market serve to enhance the return structure, and the private sector will attempt to obtain maximum leverage on the property. However, more conservative underwriting due to the economy has led many commercial banks and insurance companies to lend approximately 60-70% on a loan to value basis. We believe the quality of the tenancy within the Lafayette Building and premier location should help to secure permanent financing of approximately 75% loan to value.

- The private financing models presented in this report may not accurately reflect a true private equity market scenario. We believe that under real market conditions, a developer would renovate the property, stabilize and then sell its partnership interest. A private equity source would most likely take the developer out, hold for a period of five to ten years, and then sell its partnership interest. Again, with numerous structuring scenarios, the ultimate outcome could be done in a way that is favorable to both the government and private sector.

- In typical private sector transactions where there is a shorter master property lease term than is desirable, a "put right" or some other extension instrument would likely be structured. The government will likely not option a put right, thus the private sector will price this into the deal, which could be done through higher return requirements, lower master property lease payments or disproportionate splits in excess cash flow.

THE PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM

Public/Private Partnerships are not normally used in the renovation of buildings. In government real estate transactions, they primarily have been used in trades in kind. This is where the government receives a benefit in exchange for land. Public/Private Partnerships for this renovation would have the private entity fund the renovation and the government leases back the asset to compensate for the private funds expended. Because private financing is more expensive to the Federal taxpayer than Government-finance, public-private partnerships as a vehicle for obtaining private financing for major federal construction and repair projects are only recommended when direct federal funding is not available, nor likely to be available in a timely manner. The use of an outlease with a leaseback should only be used when such a transaction is less expensive than simple renovation or construction.

The General Accounting Office (GAO) supported the use of partnerships with the private sector only when they reflect the best economic value available for the federal government in its April 2001 report, "Funding Repairs and Alterations Has Been a Challenge – Expanded Financing Tools Needed" (GAO-01-452).

If they were used for a renovation project, the partnership would be structured in the following manner:

- the government contributes a leasehold interest to the partnership as its equity contribution;
- the private sector provides equity in the form of contributed funds and expertise in the financial and strategic aspects of property improvement.

Partnerships with the private sector have the greatest potential for success in situations where properties are located in markets with a healthy demand; there exists corresponding private sector investment potential; and there is a continued need for agency space that is not adequately satisfied with existing government facilities.

Leases for agency tenants would be subject to the same budgetary scoring procedures currently used for leasing space in privately owned buildings. The government will benefit by retaining the long-term ownership interest in the improved property, receiving a preferential option to lease the modernized space, and sharing in cash flow generated.

GENERAL ASSUMPTIONS:

- Two models are considered: direct congressional funding and a Public/Private Partnership. Within the public/private scenario we have assumed that the government will enter into a master property lease to a new partnership for two terms – 30 and 50 years.
- The overall return to the private sector would likely be higher in a true market analysis, in which the developer would likely renovate and then sell its partnership interest upon stabilization, or nearly full occupancy, of the property.
- The developer/equity partner is assumed to take a disproportionate share of excess proceeds from retiring the construction debt and obtaining permanent financing, because of the construction risk the developer is undertaking. The split is assumed to be 80% to the private partner and 20% to the government. Any excess proceeds from additional refinancing are split according to contribution percentages.
- Swing space and moving cost expenses in this report are assumed to be the responsibility of the tenants, except for the traditional funding model showing the government paying for swing space costs for return comparison purposes. A true market deal may have different characteristics as to the responsibility of moving and swing space costs, since responsibility for these expenses can be negotiated.
- Financial information for all models was obtained from the Lafayette Bldg. feasibility study submitted by Metropolitan Architects & Planners and Bolan Smart Associates (dated 5/17/01). That study presented three scenarios – (1) do nothing, (2) complete renovation with no additional space added and (3) a complete renovation with additional space added as a result of some corridor demolition. To be consistent with what the private market will demand, we have used the financial information only from concept two - full renovation with additional space added through demolition of some corridors.

- Three construction methods are considered in the feasibility study: design/bid/build, which is the most conventional method; design/build, where the control of the design is given to the contractor; and fast track, where the time of construction is not reduced and design is developed alongside actual construction. Both design/build and fast track offer faster renovation schedules but are much more risky. The feasibility study assumes a design/bid/build schedule, as do the models in this report.

- In the private sector-financing model, the government will hold a 49% equity share in the new partnership based on a portion of the value of the property.

- In the privately financed model, the private sector partner will contribute equity based on the total cost of the renovation less a construction loan of 60% loan-to-cost, and will receive a preferred return on its investment. The government will not guarantee the construction loan, or any subsequent loan. The construction loan is assumed to accrue interest at 7.5% annually, which equates to 325 basis points over 6-month LIBOR rates, and will provide for full interest deferral and no amortization. The private partner will pay off the entire construction loan along with interest accrued before securing permanent financing and will keep 80% of any additional proceeds for bearing the risk of development.

- Once the construction loan is paid, permanent debt will be obtained with leverage of approximately 75% loan to value. Debt is assumed to be for a 10-year term with a 25-year amortization and at a cost of 7.0% annually, which equates to 175 basis points over the then-current 10-year Treasury rate. In cases where the 10-year term expires and 10 or less years remain in the analysis, it is assumed the entity will seek to extend the debt for the remaining length of the hold period, as financing will be difficult to obtain. In scenarios where there is greater than 10 years remaining in the analysis, it is assumed the entity will refinance. Refinancing proceeds will be determined by capping that year's income with leverage at 65% of the value. Proceeds will be used to pay off the existing loan, with additional proceeds split between the government and the private partner based on share of equity.

- The private sector will be due a preferred return of 11.0%. This disbursement will be due before any excess cash flow is split and will accrue annually at the preferred rate if there is not enough cash flow to cover the entire preference in a given year.

- In the privately financed model, the government will receive income through preferential master property lease payments as well as a share of cash flow from the operations of the building. The master lease payment will be paid before the preferred return due the private equity partner and before any excess cash flow is split. The annual lease payment is calculated at 5% of the imputed value of the government's capital account in the venture. The 5% annual payment provides for a reasonable return to the government and risk-adjusted rate of return to the private sector partner.

- The building will be leased to current tenants at market rates existing at time of delivery. Return requirements to the private sector will escalate if the current tenants do not occupy the building upon completion of renovation.

- The 50-year model is an extension of the 30-year model. All financial information from year 30 was extended to year 50, with no escalation in revenue or expenses, as corresponding increases in both categories would end up canceling out any gains.

- The first year of this analysis is when renovation is projected to commence on the Lafayette Building, in this case 2005. The government's return is calculated for the period from the commencement of the property development through 2035 for the 30-year scenario and 2055 for the 50-year scenario. The government will receive cash flow and will retain 100% unencumbered ownership of the property at the end of the master property lease term.

- The internal rate of return (IRR) for the private partner is the rate of return for the series of cash flows starting with the initial cash contribution (the year redevelopment starts) through the end of the master lease term. For the government, the initial cash "outlay" is the implied value of the master property lease.

SUMMARY OF PARTNERSHIP INVESTMENT MODEL:

Due to its excellent location in the Central Business District (CBD) and the significant planned improvements of the building's space, the property is expected to reach stabilization within two years of completion at market lease rates.

As noted in the general assumptions, the government will contribute a leasehold interest to the partnership and will retain a 49% equity interest in the partnership. Its equity interest in the partnership will be appraised at $26.6 million. The private partner will obtain a construction loan of 60% loan-to-cost and will contribute an equal amount of equity to the project.

The government will receive income through annual lease payments of $1,329,378 (5% of the contributed value of its leasehold interest) as well as a 49% share of cash flow profit from the operations of the building. The government is projected to receive a 19.61% internal rate of return over the 30-year period, and a 19.92% internal rate of return over the 50-year period. Projected net present values for the government over the 30 and 50-year scenarios are $50,817,192 and $68,975,447, respectively.

The private partner will receive an 11% preferred return on its cash investment, prior to division of the remaining available cash flow, and will receive a projected internal rate of 23.37% over the 30-year period, and a 23.50% IRR over the 50-year period. Projected net present values for the private partner over the 30 and 50-year scenarios at the government discount rate are $56,698,479 and $69,157,435, respectively. At a 12.0% discount rate, the projected NPVs over the same time periods are $22,586,216 and $24,716,755.

V. APPENDIX D - MARKET ANALYSIS

Note: The following market analysis is included only as informational support for the market rental rates previously mentioned. The overall health of the Washington, D.C. metropolitan real estate market will support rental rates in the range of those mentioned throughout the report.

REV_00130818

BOTTOM LINE

A long-running constraint on the Washington, DC economy, federal employment and spending cutbacks, is diminishing in light of the improved fiscal health of the federal government. Meanwhile, the growing high-tech industries are reducing Washington, DC's reliance on the government. A turnaround in the District's economy, brought about by the new mayor and the federal commitment toward revitalization, represents an upside risk for the metro area. Washington, DC will be an above-average performer over the long term.

The Washington, DC market for office space finished 2000 in strong to booming condition. The market will end 2001 in somewhat weaker condition, though still very stable. Between 2001 and 2003, demand will rise an average of 3.2% per year, a decline from the 4.4% pace seen from 1995 through 1999.

ECONOMIC OVERVIEW

The Washington, D.C. metropolitan area consists of the nation's capital as well as 18 counties and six independent cities in Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia. These counties and cities are often aggregated into three larger submarkets: Northern Virginia, Suburban Maryland, and the District of Columbia itself. With more than one million jobs, Northern Virginia represents 42% of the metropolitan area's employment base, while Suburban Maryland represents 34% and the District the remaining 24%.

The Washington metropolitan area is the healthiest it has been in a number of years due to the improved financial condition of the federal government and strength in high tech, construction, tourism and business services. Income and consumption growth remains solid; office markets are booming, and home prices are appreciating rapidly. Northern Virginia continues to be the fastest-growing portion of the metro area, followed by Suburban Maryland and the District.

High-tech hub. The Washington, DC metro area continues to solidify its position as a high-tech hub. The area's high-tech presence earned it a third place national ranking in software employment density by the Software Information and Industry Association and in absolute numbers by Economy.com. The metro area supports three times the national average of programming, engineering, systems analyst and tech support jobs. A significant portion of the high-tech employment is directly within federal government agencies. Moreover, several area universities with large high-tech research activities rely heavily on federal government grants and contracts. The high-tech agglomeration continues to attract new firms, such as U.S. Dataport's two million square foot data warehouse campus in Northern Virginia. Such expansions will result in more spillover effects for the area as tech firms choose to locate close to Washington, DC's Internet infrastructure.

Affirming Washington, DC's status as a high-tech hub and boding well for future growth is the amount of venture capital funding that is pouring into the area. According to PricewaterhouseCoopers, during the second quarter the District received $188 million in funding. Virginia received an astounding $560 million, with the majority of this going into Northern Virginia, and Maryland received a record-breaking $398 million. Three-quarters of all the venture capital is going toward telecommunications, software, and business services.

House prices. The diminishing supply of available homes is fueling strong growth in single-family existing home prices. After experiencing sub-national appreciation rates of around 2% in 1999, home prices are now 7% higher than one year ago, according to the Freddie Mac/Fannie Mae repeat-purchase index. House price appreciation in Washington, DC is expected to exceed the national pace throughout the forecast horizon. Despite median house prices that are more than 20% above the national average, the high incomes of Washington, DC households have also maintained above-average housing affordability.

Construction. The tremendous expansion of the metro area is driving up construction costs, while the tight labor market and work backlogs for contractors are making it more difficult to complete projects. Earlier this construction season, the Department of Public Works was forced to couple road resurfacing projects with other bigger, construction projects due to the lack of bids for resurfacing work.. Construction costs are rising more rapidly in the Maryland suburbs, where hourly wages are increasing at a rate of 5.3% while all private-sector wages are increasing at a rate of 3.6%.

As in many US cities, labor markets in Washington D.C. continue to tighten, suggesting slower job creation in the coming years. Over the next four years, job growth will slip to an average of 2% per year from 2.7% over the past four years. Even with this slowdown, however, job growth in Washington will continue to outpace growth in the U.S. as a whole.

The tremendous expansion of the metro area is driving up construction costs, while the tight labor market and work backlogs for contractors are making it more difficult to complete projects. Bid escalation has not been severe yet, but continued strong demand for new construction projects will increase this likelihood.

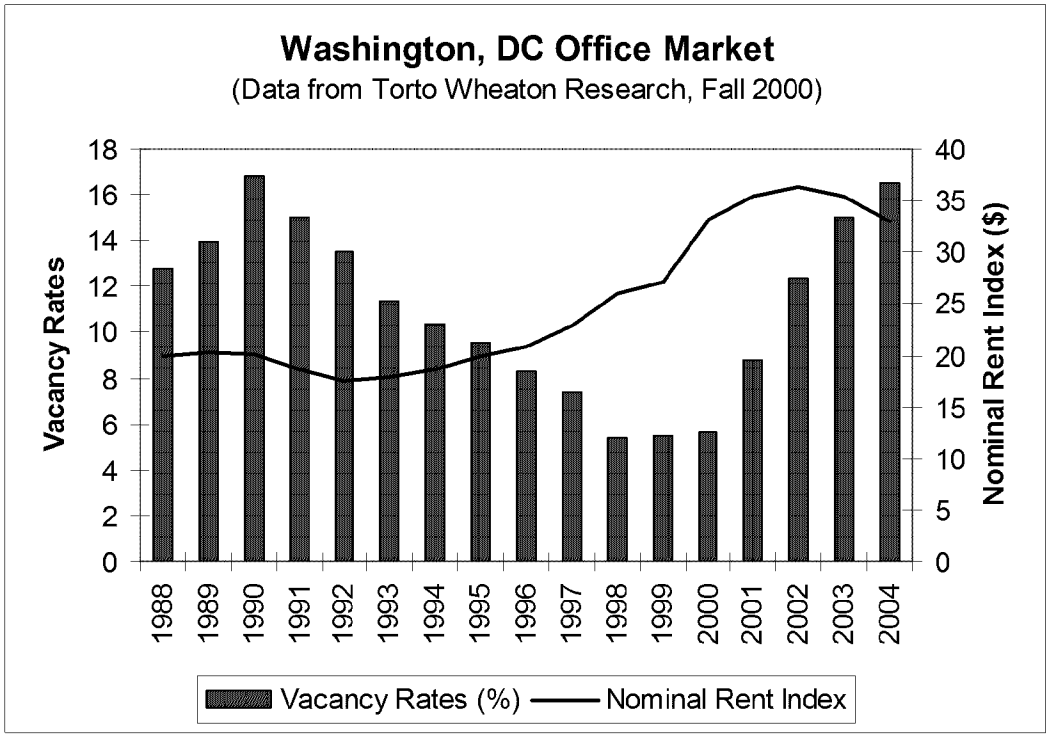
THE WASHINGTON METROPOLITAN AREA OFFICE MARKET

The Washington, D.C. office market is one of the hottest in the nation. The area ranks as one of the top office investment spots in the nation during 2001, according to a study by PricewaterhouseCoopers and the Lend Lease Real Estate. Moreover, according to Delta Associates, strong investment and development opportunities will continue over the next few years. While the metro economy is home to many struggling telecom firms, it also supports tech industries that will benefit from increased military expenditures and government business services. Additionally, expected federal surpluses will provide the economic stimulus to maintain strong real estate markets even as the national economy slows.

At 3.6%, the office vacancy rate in Washington, D.C. is among the lowest on record. Northern Virginia had the tightest market with a vacancy rate of only 2.8%, while Suburban Maryland recorded a higher vacancy rate of 5.5%, and the District itself had a rate of only 3.3%.

Meanwhile, net absorption through year-end 2000 was more than in any full year since the 1980s. Nearly two-thirds of the absorption occurred in Northern Virginia, reflecting this region's emergence as one of the top US "New Economy" locations. In the District, revitalization and a more proactive government have fueled increased office demand, making the District one of the top-performing center cities in the nation, while Suburban Maryland has benefited from strong demand from high tech and biotech companies.

That strong demand, in turn, pushed rents up by an estimated 20% in 2000 to their highest level on record. Top rents in the District are above $50 per square foot, while rents are reaching $43 per square foot in some of Northern Virginia's hottest submarkets such as Reston/Herndon, Tysons Corner and Loudoun County.



More than 3 million square feet of space was delivered in the third quarter 2000, 50% more than in the second quarter and a trend indicative of the large volume of new construction soon to be delivered into the market. Indeed, at the end of the third quarter, 22 million square feet of space was under construction. Of this space, however, more than half was pre-leased, suggesting some discipline in the market. Nevertheless, we expect vacancy rates to move toward 9% this year before climbing to 12.4% in 2002 as supply outpaces demand. As the market loosens, rent pressures will gradually begin to ease.

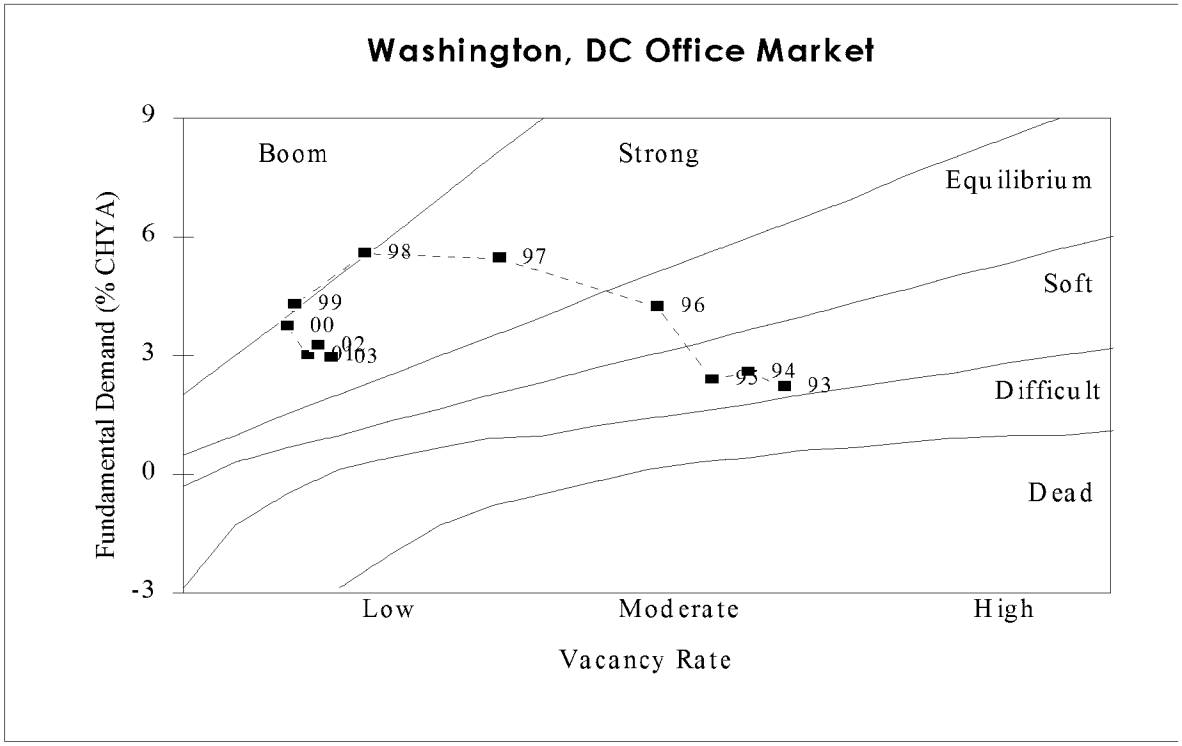
WASHINGTON, DC OFFICE MARKET CONDITIONS

Through year-end 2000, the Washington, DC office market had seen contract awards of approximately 17.0 million square feet, an increase of 6% over the 1999 total of 16.2 million square feet. Awards will average approximately 16.0 million square feet annually from 2001 through 2003, a 73% gain over the 9.3 million square feet averaged from 1995 through 1999. During the last 18 years, office construction reached its peak in 1987, when 23.3 million square feet were awarded. Awards bottomed out at 3.8 million square feet in 1992.

Between 2000 and 2003, office demand will rise an average of 3.2% per year, a decline from the 4.4% pace seen from 1995 through 1999, however still above national averages.

The Washington, DC market for office space finished 2000 in a strong to booming condition. The market will end 2001 in a slightly weaker condition, although still very stable. Conditions should remain strong through the end of 2003.

Office Market Contour for Winter 2001



VI. APPENDIX E - REPORT DEVELOPMENT AND PARTICIPANTS

A Joint Task Force was created to respond to the Conference Report request. In response to the Conference Report request, a joint task force including GSA, VA and Export-Import Bank, met regularly to develop a report outlining the need to renovate the Lafayette Building. The joint task force was initiated in January, 2001 and jointly developed the agency program requirements and identified the project parameters. All joint task force participants reviewed all stages of the report up to the final draft.

GSA hired Metropolitan Architects and Planners in February to develop the feasibility study to renovate the Lafayette Building. Concurrently, GSA hired AEW Capital Management Inc in March to aid in the preparation of the analysis for the joint report. The following personnel and consultants were instrumental in developing this report.

I gather that this proposal is already standard practice for proposed rules after they are submitted to OIRA, so I do not see any particular problem with following the same practice for proposed rules before they are submitted to OIRA. I also do not see any particular legal problem with putting publicly available FOIA-able information on the Internet.

I have questions about how OIRA ensures that those individuals who contact OIRA realize that the fact of their communications will be made public. Also, I assume from the description in the memo that the substance of communications from outside sources will remain confidential.

DRAFT DRAFT

MEMORANDUM FOR OIRA STAFF

FROM: John Graham Administrator

SUBJECT: Expanded Disclosure by OIRA of Communications from, and Meetings with, Outside Parties on Regulatory Matters

Having recently started my service as the Administrator of the Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, and with the strong support of Director Daniels, I want to take this opportunity to express to OIRA staff my commitment to ensuring that OIRA carries out its regulatory review responsibilities in a transparent manner. This means, of course, complying fully with the disclosure requirements in Section 6(b)(4) of Executive Order (EO) 12866, which provide for "openness, accessibility, and accountability in the regulatory review process."

In addition, I have decided that OIRA will expand the information that it makes available to the public regarding communications that OIRA receives from "any person not employed by the executive branch of the Federal Government" (or, more simply, "outside communications"). Since its issuance in 1993, E.O. 12866 has required OIRA to include in its public docket library only those outside communications that it receives while a draft proposed or final rule is pending at OIRA for E.O. 12866 review. OIRA's review period begins when the rulemaking agency formally submits the draft rule for review, and ends when OIRA notifies the agency that it has concluded its review.

As I noted during my confirmation process, I believe that the Executive Branch's development of rules would be improved if the rulemaking agencies consulted with OIRA throughout their development of rules, rather than having OIRA's review focused at the end of the process. Earlier and more continuous consultations would better enable issues to be identified, discussed, and addressed in a timely and orderly way. In the coming weeks, I will begin a dialogue with the agencies on how these earlier consultations can be conducted.

The initiation of these earlier interagency consultations may result in OIRA receiving additional outside communications on regulatory matters. For example, OIRA might receive outside communications before a draft proposed rule is formally submitted to OIRA for review, as well as during the period between the publication of the proposed rule and the submission of the draft final rule for review. Under the disclosure procedures under E.O. 12866, these outside communications are not required to be disclosed under Section 6(b)(4)(C). In the interests of transparency, I have decided that OIRA will make publicly available the outside communications that it receives, at whatever time, on any regulatory action that is listed in the semiannual Regulatory Agenda (which is the comprehensive compilation of the regulatory matters that are under development in the Executive Branch) and that is given a priority of "economically significant"or "other significant." OIRA would disclose, for these outside communications, the same information that OIRA is required to disclose under E.O. 12866.

In addition to expanding the scope of OIRA's disclosure procedures, I have also decided that OIRA should make it easier for the public to obtain information about these outside communications. OIRA's practice under E.O. 12866 has been to make this information available in its public docket library in the New Executive Office Building. This has required interested members of the public either to visit the docket library or to submit a Freedom of Information Act request for the file and await OMB's response to the request.

In the interests of transparency, I have decided that OIRA will take advantage of the Internet to enable the public to easily obtain the information about outside communications that is required to be disclosed under Section 6(b)(4)(C) of E.O. 12866 and under the new disclosure procedures that I am announcing. OIRA will post on OMB's Internet website –

- information on meetings, phone calls and other oral communications with outside parties that is required to be disclosed under Section 6(b)(4)(C)(iii) of E.O. 12866 (i.e., the dates and names of the participants, their organizational affiliation, and a plain-language description of the subject matter of the discussion), and

- a listing of the written outside communications, which would include the date of the communication (whether paper or electronic), the sender and his or her organizational affiliation, and a plain-language description of its subject matter (or, in the case of a large volume of outside communications on the same rulemaking activity, a categorization and description of such outside communications), in accordance with Section 6(b)(4)(C)(ii) of E.O. 12866.

In the case of meetings, OIRA will work with OMB's Administration Office to have the information posted on OMB's website (and OIRA will place the information in the docket library) as soon as possible after the meeting has been scheduled, and will update the information to the extent necessary no later than five business days after the meeting has occurred. With respect to phone calls, other oral communications and written communications, OIRA shall provide the information to OMB's Administration Office for posting on OMB's website (and OIRA shall place this information in the docket library), no later than five business days after the phone call or oral communication occurs or the written communication is received by OIRA.

These new disclosure procedures will take effect on October 1, 2001, and will apply to meetings, phone calls, and other oral outside communications to OIRA that occur on or after October 1 and to written outside communications that OIRA receives on or after October 1.

It is also my intention that OIRA develop the capability to post on OMB's website, at the earliest practicable opportunity, the actual text of the written outside communications (in addition to their being available in the OIRA docket library). OIRA's Deputy Administrator shall work to implement a process for posting the text of these written communications.

The OIRA Deputy Administrator and OIRA's Branch Chiefs are responsible for implementing these new disclosure procedures and for ensuring that OIRA complies fully with the existing disclosure procedures under Section 6(b)(4) of E.O. 12866.

Case Leaves Disabilities Activists Wary Of Bush Policy

By Sarah Schafer
Washington Post Staff Writer
Wednesday, August 8, 2001; Page E01

The Justice Department has filed a Supreme Court brief supporting a company that is being sued for allegedly discriminating against a woman with a disability, worrying some activists about the Bush administration's willingness to defend the rights of the disabled.

In the brief, the solicitor general argues that a lower court used flawed reasoning to classify the woman as disabled. The brief further argues that the high court should send the case back to the lower court so it can reconsider its ruling.

Advocates for the disabled said that the Justice Department made good legal points. But they question why the administration took sides, filing a brief that favors the employer, Toyota Motor Manufacturing Kentucky Inc.

"They could have done it because they were being hyper-technical, or they could have done it because they were trying to pander in some way to the business community," said Chai Feldblum, a professor at the Georgetown University Law Center who helped draft the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990.

Many activists said they fear the latter. They are watching closely for how the Justice Department behaves in several upcoming cases. "This is one step in the wrong direction," Feldblum said.

Dan Nelson, a Justice Department spokesman, said that "the brief speaks for itself" and would not comment further.

The White House said it is committed to supporting the rights of disabled Americans.

"As you know, President Bush is a strong supporter of the Americans With Disabilities Act," said White House spokesman Scott Stanzel, adding that the president introduced an initiative early in his presidency to fund transportation for disabled workers and encourage companies to create technology to assist them at work, among other things. "President Bush will remain vigilant in protecting the rights of individuals with disabilities, and he is proud to support the ADA. His father signed that act into law."

But groups of advocates for the disabled, seniors, labor and others are closely watching the Bush administration for signs of how supportive it will be of their various causes. And many of the more liberal groups do not like what they see so far.

As a result, they are bracing for battle. They are recruiting more people to work at the grass-roots level, creating or beefing up lobbying arms, and -- like the disability rights groups -- becoming involved in lawsuits that could set precedents.

"I think you'll see battles royale in court," said one former Clinton Justice Department lawyer who is now in private practice and asked that his name not be used. "When the advocacy group and the administration basically agree, all of the fighting is within the family. . . . When [they disagree], all of the real action is in court."

For example, earlier this year, the AARP Foundation Litigation, an affiliate of AARP, a nonprofit advocacy group for people over 50, joined the legal battle against companies that force employees to sign agreements waiving their right to sue for employment discrimination. The group worried that these agreements would hurt older workers in particular. Until a recent Supreme Court ruling, the lower courts had not been consistent in deciding the legality of these agreements.

The liberal Alliance for Justice, a national association of environmental, civil rights, mental health, women's and other advocacy organizations, is trying to boost its grass-roots efforts. It's also creating a spinoff organization "that will give us a lot more leverage to lobby and really bring our issues full force to [Capitol] Hill," said Julie Bernstein, spokeswoman for the Alliance.

Already, several groups -- including the AFL-CIO, an umbrella group for more than 60 unions -- are preparing briefs to submit in favor of the worker in the Toyota case.

That case, which the Supreme Court will address this fall, deals with the scope of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which protects people with disabilities from various forms of discrimination, including on the job. Ella Williams, an assembly-line worker at a Toyota plant in Kentucky, claims in the lawsuit that she developed carpal tunnel syndrome from her job. She alleged that the company fired her in violation of the ADA when she refused a different job that would still require her to perform some manual labor.

Toyota claimed that it tried to accommodate Williams and that she should not be considered legally disabled anyway because she was unable to perform only some tasks. An appeals court sided with Williams, and the company appealed to the Supreme Court. The brief filed by the Justice Department does not address whether Williams is disabled. It simply contends that the lower court erred in the way it decided that she was.

Andrew Imparato of the American Association of People With Disabilities said his organization does not dispute the facts of the brief. But he called the administration's overt support of Toyota "unusual" and a departure from the Clinton era. "We want to make sure they go to bat for the ADA in the same way that the Clinton administration . . . went to bat for the ADA," he said, adding that Clinton had a far-from-perfect record on supporting the law.

To that end, the association has stepped up its activism efforts and become more litigious. Two months ago, it launched a project to protect the voting rights of the disabled. It has since sued several jurisdictions that have purchased voting equipment that is ill-equipped to handle, for example, the needs of blind voters.

"If the Justice Department were more active on that issue, we wouldn't have to do that," Imparato said.

Imparato's group has also been active in opposing several of Bush's federal court nominees who they claim take too narrow a view of who should receive protection under federal disability laws.

Imparato said he hasn't lost hope, however. He and others point out that the Justice Department has filed at least one other brief that supported the disabled party in a lawsuit. In addition, a few people were recently surprised to be invited into the White House to talk about their concerns with administration officials during a march on the White House by several hundred activists.

"There's a mixed message. . . . This administration has demonstrated support," said Marcie Roth, director of advocacy and public policy for the National Council on Independent Living, an Arlington-based organization for the disabled. "We remain ever vigilant."

Case Leaves Disabilities Activists Wary Of Bush Policy

By Sarah Schafer
Washington Post Staff Writer
Wednesday, August 8, 2001; Page E01

The Justice Department has filed a Supreme Court brief supporting a company that is being sued for allegedly discriminating against a woman with a disability, worrying some activists about the Bush administration's willingness to defend the rights of the disabled.

In the brief, the solicitor general argues that a lower court used flawed reasoning to classify the woman as disabled. The brief further argues that the high court should send the case back to the lower court so it can reconsider its ruling.

Advocates for the disabled said that the Justice Department made good legal points. But they question why the administration took sides, filing a brief that favors the employer, Toyota Motor Manufacturing Kentucky Inc.

"They could have done it because they were being hyper-technical, or they could have done it because they were trying to pander in some way to the business community," said Chai Feldblum, a professor at the Georgetown University Law Center who helped draft the Americans With Disabilities Act of 1990.

Many activists said they fear the latter. They are watching closely for how the Justice Department behaves in several upcoming cases. "This is one step in the wrong direction," Feldblum said.

Dan Nelson, a Justice Department spokesman, said that "the brief speaks for itself" and would not comment further.

The White House said it is committed to supporting the rights of disabled Americans.

"As you know, President Bush is a strong supporter of the Americans With Disabilities Act," said White House spokesman Scott Stanzel, adding that the president introduced an initiative early in his presidency to fund transportation for disabled workers and encourage companies to create technology to assist them at work, among other things. "President Bush will remain vigilant in protecting the rights of individuals with disabilities, and he is proud to support the ADA. His father signed that act into law."

But groups of advocates for the disabled, seniors, labor and others are closely watching the Bush administration for signs of how supportive it will be of their various causes. And many of the more liberal groups do not like what they see so far.

As a result, they are bracing for battle. They are recruiting more people to work at the grass-roots level, creating or beefing up lobbying arms, and -- like the disability rights groups -- becoming involved in lawsuits that could set precedents.

"I think you'll see battles royale in court," said one former Clinton Justice Department lawyer who is now in private practice and asked that his name not be used. "When the advocacy group and the administration basically agree, all of the fighting is within the family. . . . When [they disagree], all of the real action is in court."

For example, earlier this year, the AARP Foundation Litigation, an affiliate of AARP, a nonprofit advocacy group for people over 50, joined the legal battle against companies that force employees to sign agreements waiving their right to sue for employment discrimination. The group worried that these agreements would hurt older workers in particular. Until a recent Supreme Court ruling, the lower courts had not been consistent in deciding the legality of these agreements.

The liberal Alliance for Justice, a national association of environmental, civil rights, mental health, women's and other advocacy organizations, is trying to boost its grass-roots efforts. It's also creating a spinoff organization "that will give us a lot more leverage to lobby and really bring our issues full force to [Capitol] Hill," said Julie Bernstein, spokeswoman for the Alliance.

Already, several groups -- including the AFL-CIO, an umbrella group for more than 60 unions -- are preparing briefs to submit in favor of the worker in the Toyota case.

That case, which the Supreme Court will address this fall, deals with the scope of the Americans With Disabilities Act, which protects people with disabilities from various forms of discrimination, including on the job. Ella Williams, an assembly-line worker at a Toyota plant in Kentucky, claims in the lawsuit that she developed carpal tunnel syndrome from her job. She alleged that the company fired her in violation of the ADA when she refused a different job that would still require her to perform some manual labor.

Toyota claimed that it tried to accommodate Williams and that she should not be considered legally disabled anyway because she was unable to perform only some tasks. An appeals court sided with Williams, and the company appealed to the Supreme Court. The brief filed by the Justice Department does not address whether Williams is disabled. It simply contends that the lower court erred in the way it decided that she was.

Andrew Imparato of the American Association of People With Disabilities said his organization does not dispute the facts of the brief. But he called the administration's overt support of Toyota "unusual" and a departure from the Clinton era. "We want to make sure they go to bat for the ADA in the same way that the Clinton administration . . . went to bat for the ADA," he said, adding that Clinton had a far-from-perfect record on supporting the law.

To that end, the association has stepped up its activism efforts and become more litigious. Two months ago, it launched a project to protect the voting rights of the disabled. It has since sued several jurisdictions that have purchased voting equipment that is ill-equipped to handle, for example, the needs of blind voters.

"If the Justice Department were more active on that issue, we wouldn't have to do that," Imparato said.

Imparato's group has also been active in opposing several of Bush's federal court nominees who they claim take too narrow a view of who should receive protection under federal disability laws.

Imparato said he hasn't lost hope, however. He and others point out that the Justice Department has filed at least one other brief that supported the disabled party in a lawsuit. In addition, a few people were recently surprised to be invited into the White House to talk about their concerns with administration officials during a march on the White House by several hundred activists.

"There's a mixed message. . . . This administration has demonstrated support," said Marcie Roth, director of advocacy and public policy for the National Council on Independent Living, an Arlington-based organization for the disabled. "We remain ever vigilant."

The Honorable Jerry F. Costello
Ranking Minority Member
Subcommittee on Economic Development,
Public Buildings, and Emergency Management Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure
House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Representative Costello:

At the August 1, 2001, hearing on H.R. 2407, the "Federal Photovoltaic Utilization Act," you requested information on sustainable design features or energy conservation measures included in the Department of Transportation (DOT) headquarters procurement that the General Services Administration (GSA) currently has underway. Since negotiations on specific items remain to be completed, I will provide as much specificity in my response as possible.

In Federal construction, GSA budgets about 2.5 percent above normal construction costs for energy conservation and sustainable design features. If this were a Federal construction project, this would equate to approximately $8 million. This amount was included in the scoring analysis.

The private sector responded to the solicitation for offers, which included a project vision to minimize the impact on the environment and the utilization of energy and other scarce and non-renewable resources. Those responding to this solicitation made a priority commitment to construct a facility that demonstrated sustainability in the broadest terms through their design methodology and analysis of energy and life cycle costs. In addition, the solicitation provides that the Government will directly pay its utility expenses for the DOT headquarters. This provides further incentive for GSA and DOT to ensure that the building design incorporates sustainable design and energy conservation measures.

A variety of measures will be considered during the design phase of the project. For instance, a construction waste management plan can be developed in order to divert as much construction and demolition debris as possible from landfills. Large amounts of natural lighting will be available in the building to reduce energy consumption. High efficiency glazing may be used to reduce solar gain in the summer and heat loss in the winter. All electrical fixtures may use energy efficient ballasts and lamps and may work in concert with lighting level devices which combine the effects of natural daylight with area lighting. Variable air volume units may be used and the system zoned in a manner as to optimize performance, minimizing energy consumption. The cooling system may have high efficiency chillers and variable speed pumping to further reduce energy consumption. These and other measures will be considered to optimize the efficiency of the building.

During the actual design phase, materials will be chosen based on their environmentally preferable attributes. These will include the types of flooring materials, paints to be used and low maintenance materials. It is also at this phase of the project where the specific items, such as photovoltaic units and green power, will be evaluated on the basis of life cycle cost efficiencies.

I hope this addresses your concerns to your satisfaction. If I can provide additional information, please do not hesitate to contact me at (202) 501-1100.

Sincerely,

F. Joseph Moravec
Commissioner

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans Affairs
House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

Dear Chairman Smith:

On behalf of the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, thank you for your recent letter expressing concern with the President's budget proposal which recommends Congressional action to require dual-eligible beneficiaries to select enrollment in either the Department of Defense (DoD) or Department of Veterans Affairs' (VA) healthcare system. Eight million active and retired military personnel and their families are eligible for benefits under the Military Health System, and about 700,000 of these beneficiaries are eligible to use both the DoD and VA systems. The DoD and VA have historically encountered problems in allocating the necessary resources due to the difficulties in estimating the number of people who will obtain healthcare services in each of the two systems. The Administration's intent in this enrollment proposal is to provide better coordination of care for dual-eligible retirees, and to provide more predictability in assessing the costs and planning the budgets of each Department. We support the Administration's objective of avoiding duplication of benefits and providing better continuity of care by allowing beneficiaries to choose, on an annual basis, to receive their healthcare through one of the two systems.

The many issues you cited are valid and they are matters that the VA, DoD and the Office of Management and Budget will consider as we plan the details of implementation, consistent with Congressional action on this proposal. The DoD and the VA have a long-standing history of reciprocal agreements, joint ventures, resources sharing, joint procurement efforts, and significant clinical and research collaboration, and will be able to address these implementation issues.

We trust that this information will be helpful, and thank you for your continued support of excellence in our health care systems.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Judge on hold once more
Politics again thwarts move to appeals court
[Unable to display image]>
[Unable to display image]>
By MATTHEW EISLEY, Staff Writer ELIZABETH CITY -- Federal Judge Terrence Boyle knows he's a lucky man. He just can't tell whether his luck is good or bad. Boyle, the chief U.S. District Court judge in Eastern North Carolina, recently got a second chance to climb the judicial ranks to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Politics thwarted his ascent in 1991 when Senate Democrats denied him a confirmation hearing after the elder President George Bush nominated Boyle, a conservative Republican.Then, after voters last fall put George W. Bush in the White House and Republicans in charge of the Senate, Boyle got a second chance to move up to the 4th Circuit, based in Richmond, Va. In May, he was among Bush's first 11 nominees to federal appellate courts.But two weeks later, Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont switched from Republican to independent, giving Democrats control of the Senate, and thus judicial appointments.Now Boyle, 55, by most accounts a bright and brusque courtroom boss, is again at the mercy of Washington politics, and he can only bide his time. "It's not fair for him to be caught up in this political thing; he was a victim before," said Bill Cobey, chairman of North Carolina's Republican Party. "They shouldn't expect a Republican president to nominate a liberal judge. They should look at his qualifications. He's a very distinguished jurist."Lawyers who work in Boyle's court generally agree that he is a good choice for the 4th Circuit. "I think he's really one of the best trial judges I've ever appeared before," said Elizabeth City lawyer Everett Thompson, a Democrat. "He's a student of the law, he works hard, he's bright, he's fair. And I never saw him be political at all about anything."Boyle won't talk publicly about his nomination. "Ethical considerations for judicial nominees preclude my participating in a press interview while the nomination is pending," he said.Actually, there are no rules requiring judicial nominees to stay mum, though many do, partly out of fear of offending the senators who will decide their fate. Out of courtesy to senators, White House nominees are asked not to comment to the public until after their hearings, White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo said.Since Jeffords' switch, John Edwards has joined the Senate committee that screens judicial nominees. That might give him enough clout to insist that Bush also nominate a Democratic judge, such as James Wynn of the state appeals court, to let Boyle's nomination move forward.Meanwhile, the Senate is being lobbied by conservative and liberal political groups that have taken an interest in Boyle and his 17-year record as a judge.Critics perceive Boyle's conservative ideology in rulings ordering congressional redistricting, barring lawsuits against the state under a federal disability law and refusing to approve a settlement in a lawsuit over employment of female guards in state prisons."There are many aspects of Judge Boyle's record that are extremely troubling from a civil rights perspective," said Elliot Mincberg, legal director for the liberal political group People for the American Way.But Boyle also has upheld federal protection of red wolves over the objection of livestock farmers, halted an execution to allow psychiatric testing of a death-row inmate, allowed the production of generic forms of the antacid drug Zantac, and refused to block the moving of the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. In the redistricting case, Boyle headed a three-judge panel that ruled 2-1 last year that North Carolina's 12th Congressional District, winding from Charlotte to Greensboro, was unconstitutionally drawn based on the race of voters. At the same time, the panel concluded that the 1st Congressional District in the state's northeast corner, which has a higher population of black voters, was not designed on a racial basis.In April, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the panel's ruling, saying the 12th District was OK on the new grounds that race can affect a district's shape as long as something else -- in this case, partisan politics -- is a bigger factor.Boyle's handling of that case could come in for criticism during a Senate confirmation hearing. For example, at first the panel unanimously agreed to skip a trial on the facts, but then the Supreme Court ordered a trial. But some legal scholars say Boyle and the judge who agreed with him reached a reasonable conclusion based on shifting Supreme Court rulings.Criminal defense lawyers, some Democrats, say they like Boyle because he holds prosecutors to high standards and rewards defendants who help convict other offenders."He is a great friend of the Constitution," said Raleigh defense lawyer Wade Smith, a former chairman of the state Democratic Party who supports Boyle. "He rules fairly and impartially."Life as a lawyerBoyle was born and reared outside the 4th Circuit in Passaic, N.J., just north of Newark and west of New York City. He graduated from Brown University, where he played football, and earned his law degree at American University.From 1970 to 1973, he was counsel to the Republican minority on the U.S. House Subcommittee on Housing, Banking and Currency. Also in 1973, he worked as one of U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms' legislative assistants.While in Washington, one day he walked into a congressional office elevator and met his future bride: Debbie Ellis, the daughter of Raleigh lawyer Tom Ellis, then Helms' political strategist.They would marry and move in 1974 to a quaint northeastern North Carolina town about as unlike Washington as possible: the historic village of Edenton on the north shore of the Albemarle Sound, where they had friends.Boyle went to work with a prominent law firm 25 miles northeast in Elizabeth City, the unofficial capital of the Albemarle region. Three years later, Boyle became a partner in LeRoy, Wells, Shaw, Hornthal & Riley, where he had a wide-ranging law practice."He has always been a very pragmatic guy," said firm partner Tony Hornthal, past president of the N.C. Bar Association. "He had a way of cutting through the chaff and getting down to the heart of the matter."But Boyle had such conservative fiscal views, Hornthal recalled, that his partners joked that he must bury his money in his yard."When we made money decisions about the firm," Hornthal said, "we ignored what Boyle said."A demanding judgeHis brother-in-law, Hood Ellis, a lawyer in Boyle's old firm, said Boyle is shy and private and doesn't talk much about himself, even with family. "There's not too many people who crawl inside his inner ring," he said.But Boyle also is competitive and loves tennis, football and jokes."He likes to win, but he's a good sport," Ellis said. "He has a very good sense of humor. And he has the greatest laugh of all time. Once you've heard him guffaw, you'll never forget it."In 1984, President Reagan nominated Boyle as a federal trial judge at Helms' urging, and he was confirmed. His home office and court are in Elizabeth City, but he also hears cases in Greenville, New Bern, Wilmington and Raleigh.In his courtroom, Boyle can be curt, combative, even insulting, some lawyers say. Others appreciate his direct style and firm courtroom command.He can be hard on either side.In a 1993 drug case against former Wake Forest Mayor Jimmy Ray, Boyle chewed out a federal prosecutor for negotiating a plea bargain he doubted was justified."Was the indictment not factually grounded?" he demanded to know. "What right do you have to make him resign?"But Boyle doesn't seem mean so much as given to intense intellectual and verbal sparring, like a tough college professor. Boyle displays an intelligent, dry wit and can be very funny. But he can quickly shift from joking with lawyers in court to grilling them.Professor Boyle's lectures During recent criminal sentencing hearings in New Bern, Boyle lectured defense lawyers and prosecutors on their jobs and gave a pointed speech on bank robbery and its proper punishment.He criticized a prosecutor for failing to bring victims to a hearing and chided a defense lawyer for requesting a lighter sentence than normal. Then Boyle paused and asked the defense lawyer whether he wanted to ask for anything else. The lawyer politely said he did not."You don't want to provoke another speech like that, do you?" Boyle asked, and then smiled. "All right."Later, just before sending a man to prison for six months for an air-rage scuffle, Boyle warned him to straighten out soon."Do you know why you're getting an active sentence?" he asked. "Give me some of the reasons. ..."But then before the man could answer, Boyle veered off on a tangent about the foolishness of airlines serving alcohol.He then recounted the man's considerable criminal history and told him: "You haven't been an Eagle Scout. This thing's been coming. You keep this up, and you're going to be back in front of me, catching more time. We'll be doing this forever. That's the bad news."Unless, that is, Boyle goes to the 4th Circuit. Then he'll be reviewing the decisions of other trial judges, correcting their mistakes or applying their rulings to the circuit's five states: North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.The American Bar Association has given Boyle a "qualified" rating for the job, its middle ranking. Roger Gregory, a Democrat whom the Senate confirmed to the court last month, had the same rating.Now it is up to Edwards, Helms, and 98 other senators to decide whether Boyle will make the cut."I don't want politics to stop us from having a judge on the 4th Circuit from North Carolina," said Smith, the Raleigh lawyer. "I think he would happily rule against me and happily rule for me whether I'm a Republican or a Democrat. I think he makes his decisions on the facts, and that's the best we could ever hope. Give me judges like that." Staff writer Matthew Eisley can be reached at 829-4538 or <A HREF="mailto:meisley@newsobserver.com ">meisley@newsobserver.com</A>

The Honorable Christopher H. Smith
Chairman
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

As requested by the Honorable Lane Evans, I am pleased to provide the Committee with the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on the "Veterans Life Insurance Improvement Act of 2001," H.R. 2222, 107th Cong., a bill "[t]o amend title 38, United States Code, to make certain improvements to the Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance life insurance program for members of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes." A consulting team of Systems Flow, Economic Systems, Macro International, and Hay Group recently completed a Program Evaluation of Benefits for Survivors of Veterans with Service-Connected Disabilities and many of the provisions of the proposed bill are consistent with the recommendations of that evaluation. For the reasons specified below, VA supports the enactment of H.R. 2222.

Section 2 of H.R. 2222 would amend sections 1917 and 1952 of title 38, United States Code, to authorize the payment of unclaimed National Service Life Insurance (NSLI) and United States Government Life Insurance (USGLI) proceeds to an alternate beneficiary.

Under current law, there is no time limitation under which a named beneficiary of an NSLI or USGLI policy is required to file a claim for proceeds. Consequently, when the insured dies and the beneficiary does not file a claim for the proceeds, VA is required to hold the unclaimed funds indefinitely in order to honor any possible future claims by the beneficiary. VA holds the proceeds as a liability. While extensive efforts are made to locate and pay these individuals, there are cases where the beneficiary simply cannot be found. Under current law, we are not permitted to pay the proceeds to a contingent or alternate beneficiary unless we can determine that the principal beneficiary predeceased the policyholder. Consequently, payment of the proceeds to other beneficiaries is withheld.

A majority of the existing liabilities of unclaimed proceeds were established over ten years ago. As time passes, the likelihood of locating and paying the principal beneficiary becomes more remote. In fact, the older the liability becomes, the more unlikely it is that it will ever be paid even though other legitimate heirs of the insured have been located.

Section 2 of H.R. 2222 would grant the Secretary authority to authorize payment of NSLI and USGLI proceeds to an alternate beneficiary when the proceeds have not been claimed by the named beneficiary within two years following the death of the policyholder or within two years of this bill's enactment, whichever is later. The principal beneficiary would have two years following the death of the insured to file a claim. Afterwards, a contingent beneficiary would then have two years to file a claim. Payment would be made as if the principal beneficiary had predeceased the insured. If there is no contingent beneficiary to receive the proceeds, payment would be made to those equitably entitled, as determined by the Secretary. As occurs under current law, no payment would be made if payment would escheat to a State. Such payment would be a bar to recovery of the proceeds by any other individual.

Section 2 of the bill would apply retroactively as well as prospectively, and is similar to the time-limitation provisions of the Servicemembers' and Veterans' Group Life Insurance programs and the Federal Employees Group Life Insurance program.

Insofar as payment to beneficiaries is made from the insurance trust funds, there are no direct appropriated benefit costs associated with this section of the bill. The liabilities are already set aside and would eventually be paid, either as payment to beneficiaries that eventually claim the proceeds, or released from liability reserves and paid as dividends.

There are approximately 4,000 existing policies in which payment has not been made due to the fact that we cannot locate the primary beneficiary, despite extensive efforts. Over the years, the sum of moneys held has aggregated to approximately $23 million. On a yearly basis, about 200 additional policies (with an average face value of $9600, or approximately $1.9 million annually) are placed into this liability because the law prohibits payment to a contingent beneficiary or to the veteran's heirs. It is estimated that approximately two-thirds of the 4,000 policies will eventually be paid as a result of this legislation. Additionally, in anticipation of the fact that about one-third of these policies will not be able to be paid, nearly $7 million has already been released to surplus and available for dividend distribution.

This section is subject to the PAYGO requirements of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, and, if enacted, it would increase direct spending. The Administration estimates that its enactment would result in PAYGO costs of $15 million during Fiscal Years 2002-2006 and a total of $25 million during Fiscal Years 2002-2011.

Adjudication of these 4,000 policies would entail administrative costs of approximately $154,000, representing two full-time employee equivalence (FTE) in claims processing and support. Approximately 94 percent of this cost would be reimbursed to the Veterans Benefits Administration's General Operating Expense (GOE) account from the surplus of the trust funds, leaving about $9,000 in government costs (which assumes that about six percent of the policies are Service-Disabled Veterans Insurance, which has no surplus and for which appropriated funds are used to cover administrative costs).

As a technical matter, section 2(c) of the bill, Transition Provision, should identify a person insured under subchapter I or II of chapter 19, title 38, United States Code.

Section 3 of H.R. 2222 would amend section 1922(a) of title 38, United States Code, by reducing the premium rates for Service-Disabled Veterans Insurance (S-DVI) by prospectively changing the mortality table upon which premiums are based. The S-DVI program was intended to provide service-disabled veterans with the ability to purchase insurance coverage at "standard" premium rates. S-DVI premiums are currently based on an old mortality table, i.e., the 1941 Commissioners Standard Ordinary (CSO) Mortality Table with 2.25 percent interest. In 1951, when this program began, these premium rates were competitive with commercial insurance policy rates. Insofar as life expectancy has significantly improved over the past sixty years, a more recent mortality table would reflect lower mortality and, hence, lower premium rates. Section 3 would provide that S-DVI premiums be based on the 1980 CSO Mortality Table with an interest rate of five percent. While just changing to a more recent mortality table would assist new entrants into the program, it would not render any assistance to those already insured under the program unless the new mortality table, with its inherent lower premiums, was made available to them also.

Section 3 of this bill would provide service-connected disabled veterans with full parity with other Americans' ability to purchase life insurance at competitive rates. This section of H.R. 2222 would ensure that service-connected disabled veterans have the ability to obtain life insurance at standard premium rates without regard to their physical disabilities. Currently, S-DVI policyholders are in effect paying a "rated" (higher) premium solely because of their service-connected disabilities. In other words, these veterans are subsidizing their own service-connected disabilities. We believe it is the responsibility of the government to subsidize these disabilities. The provisions of this section are consistent with the recommendations of the program evaluation.

The enactment of section 3 of H.R. 2222 would result in an additional subsidy of $11 million for FY 2002 and $143 million for the ten-year period from FY 2002 through FY 2011.

Section 4 of H.R. 2222 would amend section 2106(b) of title 38, United States Code, by increasing the maximum coverage under the Veterans' Mortgage Life Insurance (VMLI) program to $200,000. VMLI provides mortgage life insurance coverage to certain severely disabled veterans who have received specially-adapted housing grants from VA. The insurance is intended to pay off the outstanding balance of the mortgage in the event of the veteran's death. The current maximum amount of VMLI allowed an eligible veteran is $90,000.

The maximum amount of mortgage life insurance was last increased on December 1, 1992, when it was raised from $40,000 to $90,000. This resulted in the VMLI program covering a high percentage (91 percent) of the total mortgage balances that these severely disabled veterans held. With the increase in housing costs over the past nine years, the percentage of total mortgage balances covered has decreased significantly.

As of the start of this fiscal year, the VMLI program was providing $201 million of coverage while the outstanding mortgage balances for these veterans totaled $255 million. The coverage percentage has declined from 91 percent to 79 percent. This points to the inadequacy of the VMLI current maximum of $90,000. If the maximum coverage amount were increased to $200,000, the program would cover 98 percent of the mortgage balances outstanding. The need for the increase is even more compelling if viewed from the perspective of the number of veterans in the VMLI program who have their entire mortgage balances insured. At the current level of $90,000, only 62 percent of participants have their entire mortgage balance covered. This means that in 38 percent of the cases, if the veteran died, the survivors would still have mortgages remaining on their homes. If the maximum were raised to $200,000, 98 percent of participants would be able to have their mortgages fully covered.

The VMLI program is subsidized with appropriated funds since these veterans are charged standard premium rates. An increase in the maximum coverage amount to $200,000 would affect 1,286 of the 3,385 veterans covered by the program. While the premiums charged these veterans would increase, the subsidy required from the government would also rise. The provisions of this section are consistent with the recommendations of the program evaluation. The enactment of section 4 of H.R. 2222 would result in an additional subsidy of $1.5 million for FY 2002 and $22.6 million for the 10-year period from FY 2002 through FY 2011.

Section 5 of H.R. 2222 would amend section 2106 of title 38, United States Code, to provide that Veterans' Mortgage Life Insurance (VMLI) may be carried by the insured beyond age 70 but limiting new issues to ages 69 and below. The policy provisions of VMLI are fairly comparable to those of commercial life insurance policies, except for the VMLI provision that coverage terminates at age 70. On the one hand, like VMLI, commercial mortgage life insurance will not be issued after age 69. On the other hand, commercial life insurance companies do not terminate coverage at age 70. As part of a study of "Benefits for Survivors of Veterans with Service-Connected Disabilities", the contracting company, Systems Flow, Inc., compiled a report "VA Insurance and DIC Programs - Profile of Users and Non-Users and Beneficiaries" of the VA insurance and DIC programs. In this report, it was found that 12 percent of users whose VMLI insurance was terminated was due to their reaching age 70. Because of such terminations, VA is not providing financial security to the veterans' families.

Insofar as premium income for the VMLI program only covers about 25 percent of claims costs, this is a relatively heavily subsidized program. However, since it is only open to a limited class (those eligible for specially-adapted housing), the increase in the subsidy to allow coverage past age 70 is relatively nominal. The provisions of this section are consistent with the recommendations of the program evaluation. The enactment of section 5 of H.R. 2222 would result in an additional subsidy of $400,000 for FY 2002 and $5.8 million for the ten-year period from FY 2002 through FY 2011.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,
Anthony J. Principi

Making the Grade: How the ABA Rates Judicial Nominee

By Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Tuesday, August 14, 2001

For the past several months, and as recently as last week, the American Bar Association has been caught in heavy political gunplay for its role in grading would-be federal judges.

Conservatives say the group exhibits a liberal bias, while Democrats who control the Senate and pass ultimate judgment on nominees say they can't do their job without the ABA's input.

But for all the noise over the ABA's role in shaping the federal bench, very little attention is paid to how the group's mysterious Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary actually conducts its reviews of candidates.

The 15-member committee almost always is made up of law firm partners, working alone as they conduct at least 40 interviews of lawyers, judges and community leaders, sometimes even including Supreme Court justices. Each of their projects takes dozens of hours-time that the lawyers otherwise could devote to clients.

The products of these efforts are detailed reports on nominees, often stretching as long as 50 pages. The highly sensitive documents are distributed through the mail to avoid computer or e-mail security breaches. They are not released even to the Senate or the White House, which are informed only of the bottom line-that any given judicial candidate has been rated "well-qualified," "qualified" or "unqualified" for the job.

And at the end of the process, all of the copies of the reports are destroyed, save one.

Conservatives long have accused the ABA, which has taken liberal stands on other issues, of viewing its judicial task force's work through a liberal lens, resulting in bias in the judiciary panel's evaluations. Earlier this year, the Bush administration stripped the committee of a special status as adviser to the White House it had enjoyed for 50 years.

The ABA always has denied the allegations. Several people who have been involved in the ratings process, from members of the ABA committee to judicial candidates under review, say they never saw evidence that politics played a role.

"They did a very thorough job, focusing particularly on the question of judicial temperament," says one judicial nominee who went through the process within the last three years. "We had a sit-down (with the ABA committee's circuit representative). It was decent and cordial. None of the questions was political in any way."

Despite the administration's decision to treat the ABA no differently from any other interest group, the committee's assessments of prospective judges still matter a good deal. Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said that he will continue to rely on the ratings of the blue-ribbon committee.

And the committee has plenty of work to do. President George W. Bush quickly has cranked out 48 nominations for the federal trial and appeals courts, 44 of which are pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The new chairman of the ABA committee, Roscoe Trimmier Jr. of Boston's Ropes & Gray, says his group has had to scramble to keep from falling behind in its investigations. Trimmier was appointed chairman of the panel at last week's ABA convention in Chicago, replacing Patricia Hynes of New York's Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, whose one-year term ended.

Trimmier says the rating process places an extremely heavy burden on the committee members.

"It's incredibly time-consuming," he says. "Now that we are getting batches of nominees, we'll have to call upon former members to help out." Trimmier says he's aware of fewer than 20 former panelists nationwide who might be available to fill in.

Covert Activity

Though the process is much the same as it has been for decades, there is one key difference this year. Because the committee's long-standing relationship with the White House has been severed, the committee no longer receives advance word of projected nominees. As a result, it is no longer able to vet them for possibly disqualifying problems and warn the White House before the nomination is made.

Judicial candidates, of course, still undergo background checks conducted by the FBI before their names are submitted.

Normally, the ABA investigations are parceled out among committee members according to the federal circuits. Each of the committee's 14 members, other than the chairman, represents one of the 11 numbered circuits, the D.C. Circuit, and the Federal Circuit. Two committee members cover the sprawling 9th Circuit. All members are limited to no more than two three-year terms.

Work performed for the ABA committee is uncompensated and confidentiality rules prohibit members from farming out any of the legwork to associates or paralegals.

Trimmier says about 60 hours of interviews are conducted for each inquiry. The committee requires that a minimum of 40 people-federal, state and local judges, U.S. Attorneys, public defenders, community leaders of all sorts, and opposing counsel-weigh in with their views about a nominee, and members often talk to many more than that in compiling their reports.

The nominee is informed of the start of the process, but usually is interviewed last, after any problems have arisen, so that he or she can explain any difficulties and suggest additional people to contact.

The reports, which form the basis of the ratings, are circulated among the committee members.

The other members then vote on the ratings-by telephone or U.S. mail, never by fax or e-mail. A member who has questions about a proposed rating may ask the chairman to convene a conference call of all members. (The committee normally meets in person only twice a year, at the ABA's two major annual meetings.)

Once all members have voted, the chairman tabulates the votes and forwards the result to the White House counsel, the Department of Justice, and all members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Trimmier says the candidate is informed of his or her rating at the same time.

After that, the rating becomes public, including the existence of a minority view among the members, if any.

Looking for Litigators

If there are several simultaneous nominees for the bench in one circuit, the committee member won't be able to keep up with the pace of investigations-especially since the panel wants each report finished within 30 days after the nominee returns a completed questionnaire.

Trimmier says he can ask a member from a different region to fill in for an overburdened member, but that won't work if everyone is busy. The only other people the committee may rely upon, for reasons of confidentiality, are former members.

"It's a very broad inquiry," Trimmier says. "We look for knowledge of the law, intellectual capacity, writing ability, judicial temperament, integrity, general reputation in the community, and more." Another key aspect of any probe centers on the nominee's trial experience. "Most of the people on the committee are litigators," says a lawyer familiar with the process. "There have been ratings of not qualified on the basis of lack of experience alone. There have been minority votes on that basis. These issues do come up, and there are those who feel very strongly about it."

While committee members declined to address specific cases, a lack of trial experience is widely believed to be the reason that a minority of the panel rated current Federal Circuit nominee Sharon Prost "not qualified" earlier this month. The majority voted Prost, chief counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee and a legal aide to Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, for 12 years, "qualified."

Prost, 50, obviously has not been a litigator while on the Hill, though she had served as an attorney at the National Labor Relations Board.

David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Leahy, announced last week that Leahy had scheduled a rare hearing during a congressional recess for Prost and for a district court nominee from South Carolina, Terry Wooten. That hearing is set for Aug. 27.

Pauline Schneider, a partner at the Washington office of Hunton & Williams, is the Federal Circuit representative on the ABA committee who would have done the inquiry on Prost. She declines comment, referring questions to Trimmier.

Fred Fielding of Washington's Wiley, Rein & Fielding is the designated D.C. Circuit representative on the panel. He is responsible for evaluating nominees to both the D.C. Circuit and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Like Schneider, he refers questions about the committee's work to Trimmier.

Fielding apparently is working to wrap up his reports on Miller & Chevalier partner John Bates and D.C. Superior Court Judge Reggie Walton, both nominated June 20 for the District Court.

"I was contacted this week by Fred Fielding regarding Bates and Walton," says Mark Tuohey III, a former District of Columbia Bar president and partner in the Washington office of Vinson & Elkins. "In fact, I have been contacted by members of the committee from the Carter era through Bush II."

Tuohey says he has always been impressed with the "professionalism" of the ABA panel.

"They've always taken their job very seriously," Tuohey says. "It's never just a wink and a nod. And it's always been nonpartisan and objective."

But not all reports about the committee's work are so rosy. Two people who have been through the process as nominees say that although the investigators are thorough and show no political bias, they should keep the nominees better informed of their status.

"They never told me what my rating was. I never got an official letter that said it," says one.

"My overall impression was that this was just not a user-friendly process. I don't just mean the ABA, but the ABA did not communicate anything to me, even the rating," says another.

Federal Judge Terrence Boyle knows he's a lucky man. He just can't tell whether his luck is good or bad.

Boyle, the chief U.S. District Court judge in Eastern North Carolina, recently got a second chance to climb the judicial ranks to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Politics thwarted his ascent in 1991 when Senate Democrats denied him a confirmation hearing after the elder President George Bush nominated Boyle, a conservative Republican.

Then, after voters last fall put George W. Bush in the White House and Republicans in charge of the Senate, Boyle got a second chance to move up to the 4th Circuit, based in Richmond, Va. In May, he was among Bush's first 11 nominees to federal appellate courts.

But two weeks later, Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont switched from Republican to independent, giving Democrats control of the Senate, and thus judicial appointments.

Now Boyle, 55, by most accounts a bright and brusque courtroom boss, is again at the mercy of Washington politics, and he can only bide his time.

"It's not fair for him to be caught up in this political thing; he was a victim before," said Bill Cobey, chairman of North Carolina's Republican Party. "They shouldn't expect a Republican president to nominate a liberal judge. They should look at his qualifications. He's a very distinguished jurist."

Lawyers who work in Boyle's court generally agree that he is a good choice for the 4th Circuit. "I think he's really one of the best trial judges I've ever appeared before," said Elizabeth City lawyer Everett Thompson, a Democrat. "He's a student of the law, he works hard, he's bright, he's fair. And I never saw him be political at all about anything."

Boyle won't talk publicly about his nomination. "Ethical considerations for judicial nominees preclude my participating in a press interview while the nomination is pending," he said.

Actually, there are no rules requiring judicial nominees to stay mum, though many do, partly out of fear of offending the senators who will decide their fate. Out of courtesy to senators, White House nominees are asked not to comment to the public until after their hearings, White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo said.

Since Jeffords' switch, John Edwards has joined the Senate committee that screens judicial nominees. That might give him enough clout to insist that Bush also nominate a Democratic judge, such as James Wynn of the state appeals court, to let Boyle's nomination move forward.

Meanwhile, the Senate is being lobbied by conservative and liberal political groups that have taken an interest in Boyle and his 17-year record as a judge.

Critics perceive Boyle's conservative ideology in rulings ordering congressional redistricting, barring lawsuits against the state under a federal disability law and refusing to approve a settlement in a lawsuit over employment of female guards in state prisons.

"There are many aspects of Judge Boyle's record that are extremely troubling from a civil rights perspective," said Elliot Mincberg, legal director for the liberal political group People for the American Way.

But Boyle also has upheld federal protection of red wolves over the objection of livestock farmers, halted an execution to allow psychiatric testing of a death-row inmate, allowed the production of generic forms of the antacid drug Zantac, and refused to block the moving of the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. In the redistricting case, Boyle headed a three-judge panel that ruled 2-1 last year that North Carolina's 12th Congressional District, winding from Charlotte to Greensboro, was unconstitutionally drawn based on the race of voters. At the same time, the panel concluded that the 1st Congressional District in the state's northeast corner, which has a higher population of black voters, was not designed on a racial basis.

In April, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the panel's ruling, saying the 12th District was OK on the new grounds that race can affect a district's shape as long as something else - in this case, partisan politics - is a bigger factor.

Boyle's handling of that case could come in for criticism during a Senate confirmation hearing. For example, at first the panel unanimously agreed to skip a trial on the facts, but then the Supreme Court ordered a trial. But some legal scholars say Boyle and the judge who agreed with him reached a reasonable conclusion based on shifting Supreme Court rulings.

Criminal defense lawyers, some Democrats, say they like Boyle because he holds prosecutors to high standards and rewards defendants who help convict other offenders.

"He is a great friend of the Constitution," said Raleigh defense lawyer Wade Smith, a former chairman of the state Democratic Party who supports Boyle. "He rules fairly and impartially."

Boyle was born and reared outside the 4th Circuit in Passaic, N.J., just north of Newark and west of New York City. He graduated from Brown University, where he played football, and earned his law degree at American University.

From 1970 to 1973, he was counsel to the Republican minority on the U.S. House Subcommittee on Housing, Banking and Currency. Also in 1973, he worked as one of U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms' legislative assistants.

While in Washington, one day he walked into a congressional office elevator and met his future bride: Debbie Ellis, the daughter of Raleigh lawyer Tom Ellis, then Helms' political strategist.

They would marry and move in 1974 to a quaint northeastern North Carolina town about as unlike Washington as possible: the historic village of Edenton on the north shore of the Albemarle Sound, where they had friends.

Boyle went to work with a prominent law firm 25 miles northeast in Elizabeth City, the unofficial capital of the Albemarle region. Three years later, Boyle became a partner in LeRoy, Wells, Shaw, Hornthal & Riley, where he had a wide-ranging law practice.

"He has always been a very pragmatic guy," said firm partner Tony Hornthal, past president of the N.C. Bar Association. "He had a way of cutting through the chaff and getting down to the heart of the matter."

But Boyle had such conservative fiscal views, Hornthal recalled, that his partners joked that he must bury his money in his yard.

"When we made money decisions about the firm," Hornthal said, "we ignored what Boyle said."

A demanding judge:

His brother-in-law, Hood Ellis, a lawyer in Boyle's old firm, said Boyle is shy and private and doesn't talk much about himself, even with family. "There's not too many people who crawl inside his inner ring," he said.

But Boyle also is competitive and loves tennis, football and jokes.

"He likes to win, but he's a good sport," Ellis said. "He has a very good sense of humor. And he has the greatest laugh of all time. Once you've heard him guffaw, you'll never forget it."

In 1984, President Reagan nominated Boyle as a federal trial judge at Helms' urging, and he was confirmed. His home office and court are in Elizabeth City, but he also hears cases in Greenville, New Bern, Wilmington and Raleigh.

In his courtroom, Boyle can be curt, combative, even insulting, some lawyers say. Others appreciate his direct style and firm courtroom command.

He can be hard on either side.

Professor Boyle's lectures:

During recent criminal sentencing hearings in New Bern, Boyle lectured defense lawyers and prosecutors on their jobs and gave a pointed speech on bank robbery and its proper punishment.

He criticized a prosecutor for failing to bring victims to a hearing and chided a defense lawyer for requesting a lighter sentence than normal. Then Boyle paused and asked the defense lawyer whether he wanted to ask for anything else. The lawyer politely said he did not.

"You don't want to provoke another speech like that, do you?" Boyle asked, and then smiled. "All right."

Later, just before sending a man to prison for six months for an air-rage scuffle, Boyle warned him to straighten out soon.

"Do you know why you're getting an active sentence?" he asked. "Give me some of the reasons.

But then before the man could answer, Boyle veered off on a tangent about the foolishness of airlines serving alcohol.

He then recounted the man's considerable criminal history and told him: "You haven't been an Eagle Scout. This thing's been coming. You keep this up, and you're going to be back in front of me, catching more time. We'll be doing this forever. That's the bad news."

Unless, that is, Boyle goes to the 4th Circuit. Then he'll be reviewing the decisions of other trial judges, correcting their mistakes or applying their rulings to the circuit's five states: North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.

The American Bar Association has given Boyle a "qualified" rating for the job, its middle ranking. Roger Gregory, a Democrat whom the Senate confirmed to the court last month, had the same rating.

Now it is up to Edwards, Helms, and 98 other senators to decide whether Boyle will make the cut.

"I don't want politics to stop us from having a judge on the 4th Circuit from North Carolina," said Smith, the Raleigh lawyer.

"I think he would happily rule against me and happily rule for me whether I'm a Republican or a Democrat. I think he makes his decisions on the facts, and that's the best we could ever hope. Give me judges like that."

White House Gloomy Over Judiciary Prospects

"Improper" delays engineered by Senate Republicans to thwart President Clinton's judicial nominees so poisoned relations with Democrats that President Bush may see only five of his own choices for the federal bench confirmed this year, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez said Tuesday.

"We are trying to work through some of the logjams, but there is a lot of bitterness," Gonzales told CNN. "This is a bit of a payback. I can't argue with some of their [the Democrats'] perceptions."

Gonzales noted that some Republican senators placed "holds" on Clinton judicial nominees, denying them a Judiciary Committee hearing or a floor vote for as long as four years.

"That was wrong," he said. "That's not right. Part of this is based on the conduct of the Republican senators in the past. We had nothing to do with this problem. But it does affect us."

Gonzales was exceedingly gloomy about the prospects of winning approval for Bush judicial nominees, predicting Bush would win no more than five judicial confirmations this year.

Gonzales said each of the three previous presidents won confirmation for more than 40 judicial nominees in their first year in office.

"It's a major problem and it's going to get worse," he said. "Our best argument is that the partisanship over judicial nominations has historically been saved for the end of an administration and not at the beginning. We would expect the same kind of deference given to Reagan, Bush and Clinton."

Gonzales said Democrats are reluctant to do so, however, because they fear Bush will "stack the federal judiciary with conservatives."

Gonzales said those fears are overwrought and pointed to Bush's renomination of Roger Gregory, an African-American lawyer from Richmond, Virginia.
Clinton nominated Gregory to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, but Senate Republicans stalled the nomination. Frustrated, Clinton gave Gregory a recess appointment to the bench, one that would have expired after one year unless Bush renominated him.

"We asked Roger Gregory the same questions and he gave us the answers we expected," Gonzales said.

"The answers were what you would expect from a good, solid, conservative judge. We don't ask potential nominees about abortion or affirmative action. We ask how you would render a decision."

Gregory is one of four federal judicial nominees to have won Senate confirmation. Overall, Bush has nominated 44 judges to the federal courts. Of those 22 are for the circuit court of appeals and 22 are for district court positions. Forty nominees await confirmation.

Making the Grade: How the ABA Rates Judicial Nominee

By Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Tuesday, August 14, 2001

For the past several months, and as recently as last week, the American Bar Association has been caught in heavy political gunplay for its role in grading would-be federal judges.

Conservatives say the group exhibits a liberal bias, while Democrats who control the Senate and pass ultimate judgment on nominees say they can't do their job without the ABA's input.

But for all the noise over the ABA's role in shaping the federal bench, very little attention is paid to how the group's mysterious Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary actually conducts its reviews of candidates.

The 15-member committee almost always is made up of law firm partners, working alone as they conduct at least 40 interviews of lawyers, judges and community leaders, sometimes even including Supreme Court justices. Each of their projects takes dozens of hours-time that the lawyers otherwise could devote to clients.

The products of these efforts are detailed reports on nominees, often stretching as long as 50 pages. The highly sensitive documents are distributed through the mail to avoid computer or e-mail security breaches. They are not released even to the Senate or the White House, which are informed only of the bottom line-that any given judicial candidate has been rated "well-qualified," "qualified" or "unqualified" for the job.

And at the end of the process, all of the copies of the reports are destroyed, save one.

Conservatives long have accused the ABA, which has taken liberal stands on other issues, of viewing its judicial task force's work through a liberal lens, resulting in bias in the judiciary panel's evaluations. Earlier this year, the Bush administration stripped the committee of a special status as adviser to the White House it had enjoyed for 50 years.

The ABA always has denied the allegations. Several people who have been involved in the ratings process, from members of the ABA committee to judicial candidates under review, say they never saw evidence that politics played a role.

"They did a very thorough job, focusing particularly on the question of judicial temperament," says one judicial nominee who went through the process within the last three years. "We had a sit-down (with the ABA committee's circuit representative). It was decent and cordial. None of the questions was political in any way."

Despite the administration's decision to treat the ABA no differently from any other interest group, the committee's assessments of prospective judges still matter a good deal. Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said that he will continue to rely on the ratings of the blue-ribbon committee.

And the committee has plenty of work to do. President George W. Bush quickly has cranked out 48 nominations for the federal trial and appeals courts, 44 of which are pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The new chairman of the ABA committee, Roscoe Trimmier Jr. of Boston's Ropes & Gray, says his group has had to scramble to keep from falling behind in its investigations. Trimmier was appointed chairman of the panel at last week's ABA convention in Chicago, replacing Patricia Hynes of New York's Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, whose one-year term ended.

Trimmier says the rating process places an extremely heavy burden on the committee members.

"It's incredibly time-consuming," he says. "Now that we are getting batches of nominees, we'll have to call upon former members to help out." Trimmier says he's aware of fewer than 20 former panelists nationwide who might be available to fill in.

Covert Activity

Though the process is much the same as it has been for decades, there is one key difference this year. Because the committee's long-standing relationship with the White House has been severed, the committee no longer receives advance word of projected nominees. As a result, it is no longer able to vet them for possibly disqualifying problems and warn the White House before the nomination is made.

Judicial candidates, of course, still undergo background checks conducted by the FBI before their names are submitted.

Normally, the ABA investigations are parceled out among committee members according to the federal circuits. Each of the committee's 14 members, other than the chairman, represents one of the 11 numbered circuits, the D.C. Circuit, and the Federal Circuit. Two committee members cover the sprawling 9th Circuit. All members are limited to no more than two three-year terms.

Work performed for the ABA committee is uncompensated and confidentiality rules prohibit members from farming out any of the legwork to associates or paralegals.

Trimmier says about 60 hours of interviews are conducted for each inquiry. The committee requires that a minimum of 40 people-federal, state and local judges, U.S. Attorneys, public defenders, community leaders of all sorts, and opposing counsel-weigh in with their views about a nominee, and members often talk to many more than that in compiling their reports.

The nominee is informed of the start of the process, but usually is interviewed last, after any problems have arisen, so that he or she can explain any difficulties and suggest additional people to contact.

The reports, which form the basis of the ratings, are circulated among the committee members.

The other members then vote on the ratings-by telephone or U.S. mail, never by fax or e-mail. A member who has questions about a proposed rating may ask the chairman to convene a conference call of all members. (The committee normally meets in person only twice a year, at the ABA's two major annual meetings.)

Once all members have voted, the chairman tabulates the votes and forwards the result to the White House counsel, the Department of Justice, and all members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Trimmier says the candidate is informed of his or her rating at the same time.

After that, the rating becomes public, including the existence of a minority view among the members, if any.

Looking for Litigators

If there are several simultaneous nominees for the bench in one circuit, the committee member won't be able to keep up with the pace of investigations-especially since the panel wants each report finished within 30 days after the nominee returns a completed questionnaire.

Trimmier says he can ask a member from a different region to fill in for an overburdened member, but that won't work if everyone is busy. The only other people the committee may rely upon, for reasons of confidentiality, are former members.

"It's a very broad inquiry," Trimmier says. "We look for knowledge of the law, intellectual capacity, writing ability, judicial temperament, integrity, general reputation in the community, and more." Another key aspect of any probe centers on the nominee's trial experience. "Most of the people on the committee are litigators," says a lawyer familiar with the process. "There have been ratings of not qualified on the basis of lack of experience alone. There have been minority votes on that basis. These issues do come up, and there are those who feel very strongly about it."

While committee members declined to address specific cases, a lack of trial experience is widely believed to be the reason that a minority of the panel rated current Federal Circuit nominee Sharon Prost "not qualified" earlier this month. The majority voted Prost, chief counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee and a legal aide to Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, for 12 years, "qualified."

Prost, 50, obviously has not been a litigator while on the Hill, though she had served as an attorney at the National Labor Relations Board.

David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Leahy, announced last week that Leahy had scheduled a rare hearing during a congressional recess for Prost and for a district court nominee from South Carolina, Terry Wooten. That hearing is set for Aug. 27.

Pauline Schneider, a partner at the Washington office of Hunton & Williams, is the Federal Circuit representative on the ABA committee who would have done the inquiry on Prost. She declines comment, referring questions to Trimmier.

Fred Fielding of Washington's Wiley, Rein & Fielding is the designated D.C. Circuit representative on the panel. He is responsible for evaluating nominees to both the D.C. Circuit and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Like Schneider, he refers questions about the committee's work to Trimmier.

Fielding apparently is working to wrap up his reports on Miller & Chevalier partner John Bates and D.C. Superior Court Judge Reggie Walton, both nominated June 20 for the District Court.

"I was contacted this week by Fred Fielding regarding Bates and Walton," says Mark Tuohey III, a former District of Columbia Bar president and partner in the Washington office of Vinson & Elkins. "In fact, I have been contacted by members of the committee from the Carter era through Bush II."

Tuohey says he has always been impressed with the "professionalism" of the ABA panel.

"They've always taken their job very seriously," Tuohey says. "It's never just a wink and a nod. And it's always been nonpartisan and objective."

But not all reports about the committee's work are so rosy. Two people who have been through the process as nominees say that although the investigators are thorough and show no political bias, they should keep the nominees better informed of their status.

"They never told me what my rating was. I never got an official letter that said it," says one.

"My overall impression was that this was just not a user-friendly process. I don't just mean the ABA, but the ABA did not communicate anything to me, even the rating," says another.

Federal Judge Terrence Boyle knows he's a lucky man. He just can't tell whether his luck is good or bad.

Boyle, the chief U.S. District Court judge in Eastern North Carolina, recently got a second chance to climb the judicial ranks to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Politics thwarted his ascent in 1991 when Senate Democrats denied him a confirmation hearing after the elder President George Bush nominated Boyle, a conservative Republican.

Then, after voters last fall put George W. Bush in the White House and Republicans in charge of the Senate, Boyle got a second chance to move up to the 4th Circuit, based in Richmond, Va. In May, he was among Bush's first 11 nominees to federal appellate courts.

But two weeks later, Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont switched from Republican to independent, giving Democrats control of the Senate, and thus judicial appointments.

Now Boyle, 55, by most accounts a bright and brusque courtroom boss, is again at the mercy of Washington politics, and he can only bide his time.

"It's not fair for him to be caught up in this political thing; he was a victim before," said Bill Cobey, chairman of North Carolina's Republican Party. "They shouldn't expect a Republican president to nominate a liberal judge. They should look at his qualifications. He's a very distinguished jurist."

Lawyers who work in Boyle's court generally agree that he is a good choice for the 4th Circuit. "I think he's really one of the best trial judges I've ever appeared before," said Elizabeth City lawyer Everett Thompson, a Democrat. "He's a student of the law, he works hard, he's bright, he's fair. And I never saw him be political at all about anything."

Boyle won't talk publicly about his nomination. "Ethical considerations for judicial nominees preclude my participating in a press interview while the nomination is pending," he said.

Actually, there are no rules requiring judicial nominees to stay mum, though many do, partly out of fear of offending the senators who will decide their fate. Out of courtesy to senators, White House nominees are asked not to comment to the public until after their hearings, White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo said.

Since Jeffords' switch, John Edwards has joined the Senate committee that screens judicial nominees. That might give him enough clout to insist that Bush also nominate a Democratic judge, such as James Wynn of the state appeals court, to let Boyle's nomination move forward.

Meanwhile, the Senate is being lobbied by conservative and liberal political groups that have taken an interest in Boyle and his 17-year record as a judge.

Critics perceive Boyle's conservative ideology in rulings ordering congressional redistricting, barring lawsuits against the state under a federal disability law and refusing to approve a settlement in a lawsuit over employment of female guards in state prisons.

"There are many aspects of Judge Boyle's record that are extremely troubling from a civil rights perspective," said Elliot Mincberg, legal director for the liberal political group People for the American Way.

But Boyle also has upheld federal protection of red wolves over the objection of livestock farmers, halted an execution to allow psychiatric testing of a death-row inmate, allowed the production of generic forms of the antacid drug Zantac, and refused to block the moving of the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. In the redistricting case, Boyle headed a three-judge panel that ruled 2-1 last year that North Carolina's 12th Congressional District, winding from Charlotte to Greensboro, was unconstitutionally drawn based on the race of voters. At the same time, the panel concluded that the 1st Congressional District in the state's northeast corner, which has a higher population of black voters, was not designed on a racial basis.

In April, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the panel's ruling, saying the 12th District was OK on the new grounds that race can affect a district's shape as long as something else - in this case, partisan politics - is a bigger factor.

Gonzales noted that some Republican senators placed "holds" on Clinton judicial nominees, denying them a Judiciary Committee hearing or a floor vote for as long as four years.

"That was wrong," he said. "That's not right. Part of this is based on the conduct of the Republican senators in the past. We had nothing to do with this problem. But it does affect us."

Gonzales was exceedingly gloomy about the prospects of winning approval for Bush judicial nominees, predicting Bush would win no more than five judicial confirmations this year.

Gonzales said each of the three previous presidents won confirmation for more than 40 judicial nominees in their first year in office.

"It's a major problem and it's going to get worse," he said. "Our best argument is that the partisanship over judicial nominations has historically been saved for the end of an administration and not at the beginning. We would expect the same kind of deference given to Reagan, Bush and Clinton."

Gonzales said Democrats are reluctant to do so, however, because they fear Bush will "stack the federal judiciary with conservatives."

Gonzales said those fears are overwrought and pointed to Bush's renomination of Roger Gregory, an African-American lawyer from Richmond, Virginia.
Clinton nominated Gregory to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, but Senate Republicans stalled the nomination. Frustrated, Clinton gave Gregory a recess appointment to the bench, one that would have expired after one year unless Bush renominated him.

"We asked Roger Gregory the same questions and he gave us the answers we expected," Gonzales said.

"The answers were what you would expect from a good, solid, conservative judge. We don't ask potential nominees about abortion or affirmative action. We ask how you would render a decision."

Gregory is one of four federal judicial nominees to have won Senate confirmation. Overall, Bush

Making the Grade: How the ABA Rates Judicial Nominee

By Jonathan Groner
Fulton County Daily Report
Tuesday, August 14, 2001

For the past several months, and as recently as last week, the American Bar Association has been caught in heavy political gunplay for its role in grading would-be federal judges.

Conservatives say the group exhibits a liberal bias, while Democrats who control the Senate and pass ultimate judgment on nominees say they can't do their job without the ABA's input.

But for all the noise over the ABA's role in shaping the federal bench, very little attention is paid to how the group's mysterious Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary actually conducts its reviews of candidates.

The 15-member committee almost always is made up of law firm partners, working alone as they conduct at least 40 interviews of lawyers, judges and community leaders, sometimes even including Supreme Court justices. Each of their projects takes dozens of hours-time that the lawyers otherwise could devote to clients.

The products of these efforts are detailed reports on nominees, often stretching as long as 50 pages. The highly sensitive documents are distributed through the mail to avoid computer or e-mail security breaches. They are not released even to the Senate or the White House, which are informed only of the bottom line-that any given judicial candidate has been rated "well-qualified," "qualified" or "unqualified" for the job.

And at the end of the process, all of the copies of the reports are destroyed, save one.

Conservatives long have accused the ABA, which has taken liberal stands on other issues, of viewing its judicial task force's work through a liberal lens, resulting in bias in the judiciary panel's evaluations. Earlier this year, the Bush administration stripped the committee of a special status as adviser to the White House it had enjoyed for 50 years.

The ABA always has denied the allegations. Several people who have been involved in the ratings process, from members of the ABA committee to judicial candidates under review, say they never saw evidence that politics played a role.

"They did a very thorough job, focusing particularly on the question of judicial temperament," says one judicial nominee who went through the process within the last three years. "We had a sit-down (with the ABA committee's circuit representative). It was decent and cordial. None of the questions was political in any way."

Despite the administration's decision to treat the ABA no differently from any other interest group, the committee's assessments of prospective judges still matter a good deal. Senate Judiciary Chairman Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., has said that he will continue to rely on the ratings of the blue-ribbon committee.

And the committee has plenty of work to do. President George W. Bush quickly has cranked out 48 nominations for the federal trial and appeals courts, 44 of which are pending before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The new chairman of the ABA committee, Roscoe Trimmier Jr. of Boston's Ropes & Gray, says his group has had to scramble to keep from falling behind in its investigations. Trimmier was appointed chairman of the panel at last week's ABA convention in Chicago, replacing Patricia Hynes of New York's Milberg Weiss Bershad Hynes & Lerach, whose one-year term ended.

Trimmier says the rating process places an extremely heavy burden on the committee members.

"It's incredibly time-consuming," he says. "Now that we are getting batches of nominees, we'll have to call upon former members to help out." Trimmier says he's aware of fewer than 20 former panelists nationwide who might be available to fill in.

Covert Activity

Though the process is much the same as it has been for decades, there is one key difference this year. Because the committee's long-standing relationship with the White House has been severed, the committee no longer receives advance word of projected nominees. As a result, it is no longer able to vet them for possibly disqualifying problems and warn the White House before the nomination is made.

Judicial candidates, of course, still undergo background checks conducted by the FBI before their names are submitted.

Normally, the ABA investigations are parceled out among committee members according to the federal circuits. Each of the committee's 14 members, other than the chairman, represents one of the 11 numbered circuits, the D.C. Circuit, and the Federal Circuit. Two committee members cover the sprawling 9th Circuit. All members are limited to no more than two three-year terms.

Work performed for the ABA committee is uncompensated and confidentiality rules prohibit members from farming out any of the legwork to associates or paralegals.

Trimmier says about 60 hours of interviews are conducted for each inquiry. The committee requires that a minimum of 40 people-federal, state and local judges, U.S. Attorneys, public defenders, community leaders of all sorts, and opposing counsel-weigh in with their views about a nominee, and members often talk to many more than that in compiling their reports.

The nominee is informed of the start of the process, but usually is interviewed last, after any problems have arisen, so that he or she can explain any difficulties and suggest additional people to contact.

The reports, which form the basis of the ratings, are circulated among the committee members.

The other members then vote on the ratings-by telephone or U.S. mail, never by fax or e-mail. A member who has questions about a proposed rating may ask the chairman to convene a conference call of all members. (The committee normally meets in person only twice a year, at the ABA's two major annual meetings.)

Once all members have voted, the chairman tabulates the votes and forwards the result to the White House counsel, the Department of Justice, and all members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Trimmier says the candidate is informed of his or her rating at the same time.

After that, the rating becomes public, including the existence of a minority view among the members, if any.

Looking for Litigators

If there are several simultaneous nominees for the bench in one circuit, the committee member won't be able to keep up with the pace of investigations-especially since the panel wants each report finished within 30 days after the nominee returns a completed questionnaire.

Trimmier says he can ask a member from a different region to fill in for an overburdened member, but that won't work if everyone is busy. The only other people the committee may rely upon, for reasons of confidentiality, are former members.

"It's a very broad inquiry," Trimmier says. "We look for knowledge of the law, intellectual capacity, writing ability, judicial temperament, integrity, general reputation in the community, and more." Another key aspect of any probe centers on the nominee's trial experience. "Most of the people on the committee are litigators," says a lawyer familiar with the process. "There have been ratings of not qualified on the basis of lack of experience alone. There have been minority votes on that basis. These issues do come up, and there are those who feel very strongly about it."

While committee members declined to address specific cases, a lack of trial experience is widely believed to be the reason that a minority of the panel rated current Federal Circuit nominee Sharon Prost "not qualified" earlier this month. The majority voted Prost, chief counsel to the Republicans on the Senate Judiciary Committee and a legal aide to Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, for 12 years, "qualified."

Prost, 50, obviously has not been a litigator while on the Hill, though she had served as an attorney at the National Labor Relations Board.

David Carle, a spokesman for Sen. Leahy, announced last week that Leahy had scheduled a rare hearing during a congressional recess for Prost and for a district court nominee from South Carolina, Terry Wooten. That hearing is set for Aug. 27.

Pauline Schneider, a partner at the Washington office of Hunton & Williams, is the Federal Circuit representative on the ABA committee who would have done the inquiry on Prost. She declines comment, referring questions to Trimmier.

Fred Fielding of Washington's Wiley, Rein & Fielding is the designated D.C. Circuit representative on the panel. He is responsible for evaluating nominees to both the D.C. Circuit and the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Like Schneider, he refers questions about the committee's work to Trimmier.

Fielding apparently is working to wrap up his reports on Miller & Chevalier partner John Bates and D.C. Superior Court Judge Reggie Walton, both nominated June 20 for the District Court.

"I was contacted this week by Fred Fielding regarding Bates and Walton," says Mark Tuohey III, a former District of Columbia Bar president and partner in the Washington office of Vinson & Elkins. "In fact, I have been contacted by members of the committee from the Carter era through Bush II."

Tuohey says he has always been impressed with the "professionalism" of the ABA panel.

"They've always taken their job very seriously," Tuohey says. "It's never just a wink and a nod. And it's always been nonpartisan and objective."

But not all reports about the committee's work are so rosy. Two people who have been through the process as nominees say that although the investigators are thorough and show no political bias, they should keep the nominees better informed of their status.

"They never told me what my rating was. I never got an official letter that said it," says one.

"My overall impression was that this was just not a user-friendly process. I don't just mean the ABA, but the ABA did not communicate anything to me, even the rating," says another.

Federal Judge Terrence Boyle knows he's a lucky man. He just can't tell whether his luck is good or bad.

Boyle, the chief U.S. District Court judge in Eastern North Carolina, recently got a second chance to climb the judicial ranks to the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. Politics thwarted his ascent in 1991 when Senate Democrats denied him a confirmation hearing after the elder President George Bush nominated Boyle, a conservative Republican.

Then, after voters last fall put George W. Bush in the White House and Republicans in charge of the Senate, Boyle got a second chance to move up to the 4th Circuit, based in Richmond, Va. In May, he was among Bush's first 11 nominees to federal appellate courts.

But two weeks later, Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont switched from Republican to independent, giving Democrats control of the Senate, and thus judicial appointments.

Now Boyle, 55, by most accounts a bright and brusque courtroom boss, is again at the mercy of Washington politics, and he can only bide his time.

"It's not fair for him to be caught up in this political thing; he was a victim before," said Bill Cobey, chairman of North Carolina's Republican Party. "They shouldn't expect a Republican president to nominate a liberal judge. They should look at his qualifications. He's a very distinguished jurist."

Lawyers who work in Boyle's court generally agree that he is a good choice for the 4th Circuit. "I think he's really one of the best trial judges I've ever appeared before," said Elizabeth City lawyer Everett Thompson, a Democrat. "He's a student of the law, he works hard, he's bright, he's fair. And I never saw him be political at all about anything."

Boyle won't talk publicly about his nomination. "Ethical considerations for judicial nominees preclude my participating in a press interview while the nomination is pending," he said.

Actually, there are no rules requiring judicial nominees to stay mum, though many do, partly out of fear of offending the senators who will decide their fate. Out of courtesy to senators, White House nominees are asked not to comment to the public until after their hearings, White House spokeswoman Jeanie Mamo said.

Since Jeffords' switch, John Edwards has joined the Senate committee that screens judicial nominees. That might give him enough clout to insist that Bush also nominate a Democratic judge, such as James Wynn of the state appeals court, to let Boyle's nomination move forward.

Meanwhile, the Senate is being lobbied by conservative and liberal political groups that have taken an interest in Boyle and his 17-year record as a judge.

Critics perceive Boyle's conservative ideology in rulings ordering congressional redistricting, barring lawsuits against the state under a federal disability law and refusing to approve a settlement in a lawsuit over employment of female guards in state prisons.

"There are many aspects of Judge Boyle's record that are extremely troubling from a civil rights perspective," said Elliot Mincberg, legal director for the liberal political group People for the American Way.

But Boyle also has upheld federal protection of red wolves over the objection of livestock farmers, halted an execution to allow psychiatric testing of a death-row inmate, allowed the production of generic forms of the antacid drug Zantac, and refused to block the moving of the Cape Hatteras Lighthouse. In the redistricting case, Boyle headed a three-judge panel that ruled 2-1 last year that North Carolina's 12th Congressional District, winding from Charlotte to Greensboro, was unconstitutionally drawn based on the race of voters. At the same time, the panel concluded that the 1st Congressional District in the state's northeast corner, which has a higher population of black voters, was not designed on a racial basis.

In April, the U.S. Supreme Court overturned the panel's ruling, saying the 12th District was OK on the new grounds that race can affect a district's shape as long as something else - in this case, partisan politics - is a bigger factor.

Boyle's handling of that case could come in for criticism during a Senate confirmation hearing. For example, at first the panel unanimously agreed to skip a trial on the facts, but then the Supreme Court ordered a trial. But some legal scholars say Boyle and the judge who agreed with him reached a reasonable conclusion based on shifting Supreme Court rulings.

Criminal defense lawyers, some Democrats, say they like Boyle because he holds prosecutors to high standards and rewards defendants who help convict other offenders.

"He is a great friend of the Constitution," said Raleigh defense lawyer Wade Smith, a former chairman of the state Democratic Party who supports Boyle. "He rules fairly and impartially."

Life as a lawyer:

Boyle was born and reared outside the 4th Circuit in Passaic, N.J., just north of Newark and west of New York City. He graduated from Brown University, where he played football, and earned his law degree at American University.

From 1970 to 1973, he was counsel to the Republican minority on the U.S. House Subcommittee on Housing, Banking and Currency. Also in 1973, he worked as one of U.S. Sen. Jesse Helms' legislative assistants.

While in Washington, one day he walked into a congressional office elevator and met his future bride: Debbie Ellis, the daughter of Raleigh lawyer Tom Ellis, then Helms' political strategist.

They would marry and move in 1974 to a quaint northeastern North Carolina town about as unlike Washington as possible: the historic village of Edenton on the north shore of the Albemarle Sound, where they had friends.

Boyle went to work with a prominent law firm 25 miles northeast in Elizabeth City, the unofficial capital of the Albemarle region. Three years later, Boyle became a partner in LeRoy, Wells, Shaw, Hornthal & Riley, where he had a wide-ranging law practice.

"He has always been a very pragmatic guy," said firm partner Tony Hornthal, past president of the N.C. Bar Association. "He had a way of cutting through the chaff and getting down to the heart of the matter."

But Boyle had such conservative fiscal views, Hornthal recalled, that his partners joked that he must bury his money in his yard.

"When we made money decisions about the firm," Hornthal said, "we ignored what Boyle said."

A demanding judge:

His brother-in-law, Hood Ellis, a lawyer in Boyle's old firm, said Boyle is shy and private and doesn't talk much about himself, even with family. "There's not too many people who crawl inside his inner ring," he said.

But Boyle also is competitive and loves tennis, football and jokes.

"He likes to win, but he's a good sport," Ellis said. "He has a very good sense of humor. And he has the greatest laugh of all time. Once you've heard him guffaw, you'll never forget it."

In 1984, President Reagan nominated Boyle as a federal trial judge at Helms' urging, and he was confirmed. His home office and court are in Elizabeth City, but he also hears cases in Greenville, New Bern, Wilmington and Raleigh.

In his courtroom, Boyle can be curt, combative, even insulting, some lawyers say. Others appreciate his direct style and firm courtroom command.

He can be hard on either side.

In a 1993 drug case against former Wake Forest Mayor Jimmy Ray, Boyle chewed out a federal prosecutor for negotiating a plea bargain he doubted was justified.

"Was the indictment not factually grounded?" he demanded to know. "What right do you have to make him resign?"

But Boyle doesn't seem mean so much as given to intense intellectual and verbal sparring, like a tough college professor.

Boyle displays an intelligent, dry wit and can be very funny. But he can quickly shift from joking with lawyers in court to grilling them.

Professor Boyle's lectures:

During recent criminal sentencing hearings in New Bern, Boyle lectured defense lawyers and prosecutors on their jobs and gave a pointed speech on bank robbery and its proper punishment.

He criticized a prosecutor for failing to bring victims to a hearing and chided a defense lawyer for requesting a lighter sentence than normal. Then Boyle paused and asked the defense lawyer whether he wanted to ask for anything else. The lawyer politely said he did not.

"You don't want to provoke another speech like that, do you?" Boyle asked, and then smiled. "All right."

Later, just before sending a man to prison for six months for an air-rage scuffle, Boyle warned him to straighten out soon.

"Do you know why you're getting an active sentence?" he asked. "Give me some of the reasons.

But then before the man could answer, Boyle veered off on a tangent about the foolishness of airlines serving alcohol.

He then recounted the man's considerable criminal history and told him: "You haven't been an Eagle Scout. This thing's been coming. You keep this up, and you're going to be back in front of me, catching more time. We'll be doing this forever. That's the bad news."

Unless, that is, Boyle goes to the 4th Circuit. Then he'll be reviewing the decisions of other trial judges, correcting their mistakes or applying their rulings to the circuit's five states: North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland.

The American Bar Association has given Boyle a "qualified" rating for the job, its middle ranking. Roger Gregory, a Democrat whom the Senate confirmed to the court last month, had the same rating.

Now it is up to Edwards, Helms, and 98 other senators to decide whether Boyle will make the cut.

"I don't want politics to stop us from having a judge on the 4th Circuit from North Carolina," said Smith, the Raleigh lawyer.

"I think he would happily rule against me and happily rule for me whether I'm a Republican or a Democrat. I think he makes his decisions on the facts, and that's the best we could ever hope. Give me judges like that."

White House Gloomy Over Judiciary Prospects

By Major Garrett
CNN
Tuesday, August 14, 2001

"Improper" delays engineered by Senate Republicans to thwart President Clinton's judicial nominees so poisoned relations with Democrats that President Bush may see only five of his own choices for the federal bench confirmed this year, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez said Tuesday.

"We are trying to work through some of the logjams, but there is a lot of bitterness," Gonzales told CNN. "This is a bit of a payback. I can't argue with some of their [the Democrats'] perceptions."

Agree. When its on the road, it is different in kind from that question we had about use of the Oval for what would ultimately be a political commercial.

My thoughts: If an outside political or other group wants to film the President while he is on his trip and then use it for its purposes, that is fine (putting aside commercialization questions). If official White House film/pictures are taken on the trip (as is done on all trips), that also is fine. There obviously should be a defined official purpose for any film/pictures, however. If down the road, an outside political or campaign group wants to purchase official WH photos, there is a mechanism to do that through the WH Photo Office.

Ken--
Below is from Lionel Sosa and Frank Guerra. Is this doable (see bold):

On the media question (see bold), I am sure Mercy will plug in Telemundo and Univision, but for what it is worth, we should explore the possibility of having Mexico press cover the San Jose event. There is an interesting dynamic with Mexican press at the border--news reported in Mexico always trickles back across the border via word of mouth.

Thanks
lbr

Leonard,

It was an honor to be invited to the White House to participate in discussions regarding one of the most important political issues facing our president and our party) that of the Hispanic vote. Clearly, Lionel, Cesar and I are eager to assist you and your office in any way necessary to advance the President,s agenda and the cause in general.

As recently discussed, we believe it is very important to document President Bush,s outreach efforts towards our community, beginning with this month,s pending visit to San Antonio. As such, we propose that the visit be captured on film, just as his Latino-focused activities were documented during the campaign. Doing so will allow you to begin building an archive for future communications needs.

Also, should your communications department need or want assistance in pitching the visit internationally, we are available to help coordinate interviews (one on ones if possible) with the National Univison and Telemundo reporters based in Texas, as well as with Mexico,s Televisa correspondent. We have solid relationships with all of these entities through Cesar,s contacts.

I will follow up with a phone call on both of these matters.

Finally, thanks for including me in your efforts. Know that I am always at the ready to do whatever it takes to further the cause, right along with Lionel and Cesar.

Mr. Ken Mehlman

Dear Ken,

TEAM 100 has recently acquired a set of photographs from a June 8, 2000, event for the Ridge Leadership Fund. Many of these photographs contain TEAM 100 and Regents members interacting with President Bush in a relaxed, intimate setting. We are planning to place these photographs on the TEAM 100 website, but prior to doing so would appreciate your reviewing the photos to ensure your agreement that they are suitable for this purpose. To be specific, the website they would be displayed on is password protected, and only TEAM 100 members can obtain a username and password. As an additional security element, members must first call the TEAM 100 office to be issued a username and password.

TEAM 100 would like members to have access to these photographs online so they may order copies of these memorable prints through our office. Copies of these photographs are included with this letter for your approval.

Thank you for your consideration of this matter, and I look forward to hearing from your office regarding this matter.

Sincerely,

Victoria Maxwell
TEAM 100
Republican National Committee

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

The President's Commitment to Veterans

Today's Presidential Action:

- Continuing his "Home to the Heartland" tour, President Bush today stressed his personal commitment to veterans at the Veterans of Foreign Wars (VFW) National Convention in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

- The President announced today that he has directed the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) to resolve 53,000 claims that have been pending for more than one year.

- President Bush's action will cut through the red tape and ensure that America's oldest veterans receive the benefits they have earned as quickly as possible.

Background: The Administration's Effort to Reduce the Veterans Claims Backlog:

- In January, the Bush Administration inherited a large and growing backlog of claims for veterans' disability benefits. Currently, there are about 600,000 claims pending in the Veterans Benefits Administration (VBA) of VA.

- This bureaucratic backlog hurts the men and women who have served our country in uniform, as well as their loved ones. For example, more than 1,000 World War II veterans pass away every day. In too many cases, these veterans die before VA reaches a decision on their claims.

- Earlier this year, President Bush directed Secretary Principi to conduct a top-to-bottom review of VA claims processing to identify weaknesses and areas for improvement. This review, expected to be released in late September, reflects President Bush's commitment to make the processing of applications for benefits faster, easier and more accurate for all veterans.

- Today, the President announced a special initiative to resolve the languishing claims of America's oldest veterans. At the President's directive, Secretary Principi and the VA will:

  - Establish a special unit, known as a "Tiger Team," in VBA's regional office in Cleveland, Ohio. This team of experienced employees and managers will develop and adjudicate many of the longest-pending claims from older veterans around the country.
  - Direct staff located in VBA's nine regional Service Delivery Area Network Resource Centers to focus their efforts on the balance of old pending claims.
  - Give a high priority to the remaining claims of older veterans and ensure that these claims are adjudicated in a timely manner.

- As a result of this process, VA expects that 53,000 cases that have been pending for more than one year can be resolved, in addition to those being completed through VA's normal decision process. This will help to speed benefits to those older veterans who have earned them through their service to our nation.

Ensuring Quality Health Care for Our Nation's Veterans:

- Earlier this year, President Bush issued an executive order creating a Presidential Task Force to improve health care for veterans and military retirees. This high-level task force will be led by former Congressman Gerald Solomon and Dr. Gail Wilensky, the former Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration. Veterans and military retirees have made tremendous sacrifices for our nation. They deserve the best quality of health care our nation can provide. The Task Force will recommend specific actions to improve the way that the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of Defense work together to provide quality health care for those who have served in uniform who are eligible for VA benefits.

- The Bush Administration has made considerable progress on implementing the vital Veterans Millennium Health Care Act. This action will make significant improvements to the medical programs for veterans, particularly long-term care. Because of President Bush's action:

  - ✓ More veterans with disabilities connected to their service to our country will get priority for nursing home care;
  - ✓ More veterans who were injured in combat and received the Purple Heart will receive priority eligibility for care;
  - ✓ More veterans will be able to enroll in post-traumatic stress disorder and substance abuse treatment programs; and
  - ✓ Some veterans will be able to enroll in new pilot programs for long-term care and assisted living.

- The Administration is also continuing to implement parts of the Veterans Millennium Health Care Act that would allow VA to pay for enrolled veterans' emergency care in community hospitals and expand eligibility for home and community-based long-term care services.

- Secretary Principi recently announced several new health care facilities for veterans; the creation of six new centers for Parkinson's Disease research; and the formation of 25 new outpatient care clinics in 17 states.

President Bush: Honoring Our Nation's Veterans:

- President Bush has taken a number of steps to honor the men and women who have served in uniform.

  - On Memorial Day, President Bush signed bipartisan legislation that will end the needless delays and ensure that the planned World War II Memorial will be located where it belongs – between the Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial on the National Mall – to honor America's "Greatest Generation." Signing the World War II Memorial legislation reflects the President's commitment to honor the dedication and sacrifice of the 16 million Americans who served in uniform during the war, their families, and all those who contributed to the war effort.

- On June 6, President Bush also helped to dedicate the National D-Day Memorial in Bedford, Virginia. The Memorial is located in the town that lost the highest number of soldiers, per capita, of any American community during the invasion of Normandy.
- One June 5, the President signed bipartisan legislation that increased financial assistance to families who have recently lost military service members. This includes the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole in Yemen that killed 17 sailors; the accidental bomb dropping by a Navy Hornet in a U.S.-Kuwaiti air exercise that resulted in five deaths; and a Georgia plane crash that killed 21 National Guardsmen.

The President's Budget and Veterans:

- The President's Budget increases net discretionary budget authority for the Veterans Health Administration by nearly $1 billion over the FY01 level. It focuses VA's health care system on its core mission of providing high-quality health care to veterans with service-connected disabilities or low incomes, and it supports the President's new task force to study ways of improving health care access and quality.

- The Budget provides a $133 million increase for the Veterans Benefit Administration (VBA) to improve claims processing. These funds will allow VBA to hire 890 new employees, make information technology investments, and identify best practices as it strives to improve the service and delivery of benefits to veterans and their families. Although the estimated average number of days to process a claim is 273 in 2002, VA is aggressively pursuing a goal of 100 days by the summer of 2003.

- The President's Budget also increases funding for National Cemeteries by $12 million to ensure that current cemeteries are properly maintained. It also increases construction funding for cemeteries in Florida, Michigan, Georgia, California, Pennsylvania, and Oklahoma. The funding will also allow for expansion of existing cemeteries in Massachusetts and Washington.

- The President's Budget provides $441 million, a $78 million increase, for construction to improve VA medical centers; plan, develop, or expand national cemeteries; and launch VA's multi-year health care infrastructure realignment initiative.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Presidential Action – August 3

White House Office of Communications

Message

The President will call on Congress to change the old ways of doing business in Washington by joining him to protect taxpayers from irresponsible spending, budget games and policies that will jeopardize our economy, hurt working Americans and return us to the days of deficits.

Presidential Action

Today in Missouri the President will:

- ☑ Outline key priorities he hopes to accomplish this fall – education reform, strengthening our military, protecting Social Security and Medicare, paying off debt, stopping irresponsible spending, and finishing the job on patient protection legislation and his agenda to encourage the work of our nation's faith-based charities.
- ☑ Discuss the upcoming OMB mid-session budget review which will show that the President's budget has fully funded America's priorities, preserved and protected the Social Security surplus, spent every dime of Medicare on Medicare and Medicare alone, and paid off record amounts of debt.
- ☑ Demonstrate his commitment to protecting taxpayers by outlining commitments that he will accept as the final stages of the budget debate begin.
- ☑ Outline key spending and budget temptations facing Congress when they return.
- ☑ Call on Congress to send him legislation as soon as possible to fund our public schools and improve the quality of life for our men and women in uniform.

The Budget & Spending Temptations Facing Congress

- ✓ The temptation of the false emergency – cloaking risky spending as "emergencies" to hide their true costs.
- ✓ The temptation to complain that the budget has been cut, when in fact, it has increased.
- ✓ The temptation of the last-minute budget raid for irresponsible spending.
- ✓ The temptation to tap into the Social Security surplus.
- ✓ The temptation to treat spending limits in the budget agreement as an option, instead of a binding commitment.
- ✓ The temptation to play games with the budget process by holding hostage key appropriations on vital needs like education and defense.

The President's Commitments

- ✓ The President will oppose tax increases that will hurt Americans and depress our economy
- ✓ The President will not allow new spending to cut into essential programs or to slow repayment of our debt
- ✓ The President will not accept wasteful new spending at the expense of our men and women in uniform who need better housing, more pay and better training.
- ✓ The President will preserve and protect the integrity of Social Security and Medicare.

Subject: Political Photo question

Noel:

The President attended the President's Dinner June 27, which, I believe, was a fund-raiser for the RNC. The film is restricted, but we have a request from the office of Management and Administration for a personal photo an attendee who met the President. They would like to send it to the President for signing and then send it to the person.

This is their second request for photos from this event. We ordered two photos for them previously.

My understanding is that if it's a political event, no photos can be ordered either for media or personal use.

questions:

Did we make a mistake when we initially ordered the photos?
Should we fulfill their second order for another photo?
Do I have a correct understanding of the policy?

thank you,
Lynden

The Democratic chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee held a one-man hearing Wednesday on two of President Bush's judicial nominees. The session during Congress' August vacation came amid Republicans complaints that Democrats are delaying action on President Bush's appointments.

"I want to get the process moving," said Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt. "I'm trying to go the extra mile by coming back for hearings today." He looked at the empty chairs next to him and said: "I hope that at least some of the Republicans who complained why don't we have more hearings will also get on an airplane and join us."

The rare midvacation hearing did not impress Republicans.

"While we welcome any efforts to finally move the process along, we're far behind where we should be at this point in President Bush's term," said Matt Latimer, spokesman for one GOP committee member, Arizona's Jon Kyl.

Under consideration Wednesday were Reggie Walton, a District of Columbia judge nominated for the federal bench, and Richard Nedelkoff, Bush's pick to be director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance at the Justice Department.

Only four of Bush's 44 judicial nominees have been confirmed.

"A lot of us are trying to restore dignity and regularity to the nominations process. ... We're trying to make the process move smoothly," Leahy said.

The White House said it would work with Leahy to move the nominations along.

"There really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously," Bush's spokesman Ari Fleischer said.

Just before the August recess all of president's 164 unconfirmed nominees were sent back to the White House by Senate Democrats because of a political tiff over two contentious nominees.

The move was procedural and senators in both parties expect Bush to renominate all of his candidates.

Senators not present Wednesday can submit questions to Walton and Nedelkoff until Aug. 31. Following the Senate's return after Labor Day, the committee will decide if the nominations will be sent to the full Senate for a vote.

Leahy has scheduled a hearing Aug. 27 to consider two more nominees.

Avoiding A Political Deadend On Judges

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
Scripps Howard News Service

Long before the President's first list of nominees to the federal courts arrived in the Senate, Senate Republicans and Democrats, and liberal and conservative organizations, were already at their battle stations. And it appears they remain there for the foreseeable future.

What used to be a fairly straightforward process - the nomination and confirmation of federal judges - has become more contested, acrimonious and time-consuming in recent years. According to research by the Constitution Project, the length of time from vacancy to confirmation has increased in every administration since President Ford's. It took the 105th Congress (1997-98) an average of 201 days to act on Clinton nominees. Consider that in 1922, when President Harding nominated George Sutherland, the Senate confirmed him within hours. In 1953, the Senate confirmed Earl Warren as Chief Justice without even questioning him.

The reasons for the change are not that complex. The number of federal judges has increased. The federal courts have been called upon to decide controversial social issues in such areas as school prayer, abortion, and affirmative action. This has, in turn, brought about increasing political pressure from interest groups that have proliferated dramatically in the last 20 years.

Two recent developments have further roiled partisan waters swirling around nominations. The first is the feeling of Democrats that Senate Republicans kept Clinton's court nominees bottled up in committee, sometimes for years, for ideological reasons. Republicans reply that Clinton was slow in getting nominations to the Senate. Both are right. It is also true that when a Republican holds the White House and the Democrats hold the Senate majority, the Democrats hold up judicial confirmations in presidential election years.

If Democratic senators hold to the principle of "an eye for an eye" and the Republicans hold to an absolute and exclusive presidential right to choose federal judges, the result will be an accelerating cycle of stalemate and polarization. In this scenario, the courts themselves cannot avoid being painted with accusations of partisanship. That would corrode popular belief in impartial justice and hence respect for the law.

Options are open to both sides to defuse the situation. First, they could agree upon a few principles based upon the recommendations of the Constitution Project:

One, candidates for judgeships should be committed to deciding cases based upon law and the facts of the case and should renounce ideological commitments.

Two, candidates should be nominated and confirmed based upon experience, qualifications, temperament, character and general views of the law and the judicial role.

Three, the president and the Senate must not ask for, and the candidate not offer or consent to give, any pre-commitments about unresolved cases or issues that may come before them as judges.

Four, all parties to the nomination and confirmation process should conduct themselves only in ways that reinforce the principle of judicial independence.

Fifth, diversity on the federal bench is consistent with judicial independence and should be a goal of the appointment process.

Sixth, the country is entitled to a viable and efficient federal court system. Candidates therefore should move through nomination, Senate hearings and floor vote expeditiously and fairly.

For the good of the country and the integrity of the courts, the president should seek the meaningful counsel of all parties before deciding on nominees. This he can certainly do without relinquishing his exclusive constitutional authority to nominate judicial candidates. For their part, Democrats should participate in such consultations with the sole condition that the nominee satisfy the broad judicial criteria enumerated above.

Finally, we would call upon various interest groups not to decide in advance that they will oppose or support all nominees that come from the White House. We should not demand pro-life or pro-choice judges but independent judges. We should not demand judges who are friendly to labor or business, but judges who are manifestly unbiased in either direction. We should not demand pro-environment or pro-development judges, but those who will look at the facts of the case, and decide in favor of the law, the Constitution and thus all the people of the United States.

Above all, we should seek agreement on nominees who can win confirmation under the existing political conditions. Unwavering dedication to the principle of judicial independence should be the legacy of the Bush administration and the 107th Congress. The public interest demands no less.

Ari Fleischer Holds White House Briefing

By Lloyd Cutler and Mickey Edwards
FDCH Political Transcripts
Wednesday, August 22, 2001

QUESTION: Senator Leahy today held a hearing attended only by himself, I think, on...

FLEISCHER: Then I'm sure there were no debates.

QUESTION: ... one of the president's judicial nominees. What does the White House feel about the pace of the Judicial Committee hearings on the president's nominees? And why did the president not request a holdover before the August break occurred, which would have then made it unnecessary for Senator Leahy to hold this hearing today?

FLEISCHER: Well, as far as the pace of the nominees go, this administration, even with a shortened transition, is way ahead of the pace of previous presidents in their first years -- President Clinton, President Bush or President Reagan -- in making nominations, including that to the federal courts.

The administration is going to work very hard and diligently with Senator Leahy to move forward on Senate confirmation of those nominees.

You know, that's really not a partisan issue, that's an issue about how to serve people who have a legitimate claim and need to go to court and don't want to wait in line for courtrooms to open up because there are no judges sitting in judgment. And that's why, whether you're a Democrat or you're a Republican, there really is a national interest in filling the vacancies that are in the judiciary, and the administration is hopeful that the Senate will take that interest seriously and will serve the public.

QUESTION: I mean you're comfortable with the pace, then, that the Senate has maintained?

FLEISCHER: I think we'll know more by the end of the year. In fairness, many of the nominations the administration made came in late July, and so the Senate's just taking a look at those now, and the Senate has every right for advice and consent, they're going to exercise their prerogatives.

I think it will be an interesting question to take a look at come October and November when Congress is ready to recess for the year. At that point, there'll be a serious burden on the Congress and on the United States Senate particularly to have taken action and passed the nominees so that the judiciary is not clogged and so there aren't vacancies when people expect to have their fair day in court.

When you are asked about the budget debate, the new budget numbers, and the President, keep the following in mind:

1. Talk about the President's priorities, not about arcane budget process. The President's priorities like education and health care will trump partisan process every time.

2. Always talk about the IMMEDIATE ACTION that President Bush has taken to address the issues that are important to Americans. Be sure to use the words "immediate action" to describe the steps the President has taken on the issue you are being asked about. For example, the President took immediate action to jump start our economy by cutting taxes to put money in people's pockets when the need it most, paying off historic levels of debt, and pursuing trade policies to open foreign markets to American goods and services. While other's played Medicare politics the President took immediate action to get seniors help with their skyrocketing prescription drug bills by getting them a prescription drug discount card. The President took immediate action to help our men and women in uniform by signing into law important pay raise and housing and training money. etc, etc, etc. The President has taken immediate action to help those who suffer from high energy bills by.....

First talk about the immediate steps the President has taken to help and then talk about his vision for the future on the issue.

Attached are some suggested responses if you get asked about the new budget numbers and (1) prescription drug benefits for seniors, (2) military spending increases, and (3) the President's commitment to health care for the uninsured.

Now, take IMMEDIATE ACTION and read these now.

Questions & Answers

Q1: Many say that the new budget numbers will prevent the President from funding a prescription drug benefit for seniors. Is this true?

President Bush wants to give seniors a Medicare prescription drug benefit as soon as possible. That's why his budget includes $190 billion to improve Medicare and get seniors a long-overdue drug benefit.

While many have chosen to play politics on Medicare, the President has already taken immediate action to get help to seniors who face skyrocketing drug bills. He introduced a prescription drug discount card to help seniors save money on their prescription drug bills. AARP praised the President for his new card. The President unveiled the new card because he thinks it is important to get seniors help as soon as possible.

The new budget numbers show the President has actually increased from earlier this year the amount of money available for a prescription drug benefit and improvements to Medicare – From $153 billion over 10 years to $190 billion over 10 years.

Q2: Many assert that the new budget numbers will prevent President Bush from funding his increases in military spending. Is this true?

The President is committed to funding his long-overdue increases in spending on our men and women in uniform.

He has already taken immediate action to send money to our troops who need important improvements in their quality of life. Earlier this year the President signed into law $5.6 million in money to address urgent defense needs, including pay raises and training and housing improvements.

Q3: Will the new budget numbers prevent the President from helping those who need health care?

The President is committed to improving health insurance and bringing health care to those who currently are uninsured or have no access to it.

- ☑ The President is working to improve Medicaid and the State Children's Health Insurance Programs to increase access for the 42 million Americans who are today uninsured.
- ☑ The President has proposed $71 billion in health insurance tax credits to help low-income Americans purchase health insurance.
- ☑ The President has provided $190 billion over 10 years to improve Medicare and give seniors better health care and a prescription drug benefit. The President also took immediate action to help seniors with a new prescription drug discount card.
- ☑ His budget includes a $124 million increase for community health centers which help get care to 11 million people in inner cities and rural areas. The President's budget includes the first installment of a five-year plan to double the number of people served by the health centers.
- ☑ Budget includes $2.75 billion increase for the National Institutes of Health to help double spending in the coming years on important health care research. The increase will help support a record 34,000 research project grants to help improve the health of all Americans.

- ☑ The President forged a compromise to break six years of gridlock and get important new patient protections to Americans.

- ☑ $100 million to increase access to drug treatment.

- ☑ $ 22 million for childhood immunization.

(More specific details on the SCHIP program)

The Administration has not agreed that the best use of these funds is to expand the SCHIP program. This is because most states have not yet used their full SCHIP allocation allowed under current law, and because most of the neediest uninsured - with incomes below 200% of poverty line - would not be helped by proposals to expand the income eligibility to a higher level.

Instead, the Administration has taken steps endorsed by governors of both parties to streamline the process of approving innovative state approaches to covering the uninsured, particularly those with lower incomes. These administrative steps, including the recently-announced Health Insurance Flexibility and Accountability Initiative, reflect the Administration's focus on results for reducing the uninsured and will accomplish right now many of the goals of legislation to expand SCHIP that is now being debated in Congress - including covering parents and covering additional "optional" populations. The Administration believes that we should move forward now on covering more people through Medicaid and SCHIP, and that this can be done through current law. In fact, Secretary Thompson has worked through a backlog of state applications for additional coverage quickly - resulting in expansions of coverage to over 800,000 lower-income Americans at already this year, with more expansions expected.

Brett, quick question. We are putting togther a part time Presidential board, and our potential chairman would like the board to use on expert he knows as a policy staffer. Is it ethical for a presidiential board to use the services of an expert who is not paid by either an agency or the WH? We need to get this resolved for a deadline early Thursday.

A BILL

To amend title 38, United States Code, to improve programs for homeless veterans, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

REV_00131557

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Heather French Henry Homeless Veterans Assistance Act".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings; definition.
Sec. 3. National goal to end homelessness among veterans.
Sec. 4. Advisory Committee on Homeless Veterans.
Sec. 5. Meetings of Interagency Council on the Homeless.
Sec. 6. Evaluation of programs and activities regarding homeless veterans.
Sec. 7. Per diem payments for furnishing services to homeless veterans.
Sec. 8. Dental care for homeless veterans.
Sec. 9. Programmatic expansions.
Sec. 10. Various authorities.
Sec. 11. Life safety code for grant and per diem providers.
Sec. 12. Assistance for grant applications.
Sec. 13. Extension of homeless veterans reintegration program.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS; DEFINITION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On the field of battle, the members of the Armed Forces who defend the Nation are honor-bound to leave no one behind and, likewise, the Nation is honor-bound to leave no veteran behind.

(2) The Department of Veterans Affairs report known as the Community Homeless Assessment, Local Education, and Networking Groups for Veterans (CHALENG) assessment, issued in May 2000, reports that during 1999 there were an estimated 344,983 homeless veterans, an increase of 34 percent above the 1998 estimate of 256,872 homeless veterans.

(3) The 1996 National Survey of Homeless Assistance Providers and Clients found that, although veterans constitute only 13 percent of the adult population, veterans comprise 23 percent of homeless clients.

(4) Homelessness among veterans is persistent despite unprecedented economic growth and job creation and general prosperity.

(5) While there are many effective programs that assist homeless veterans to again become productive and self-sufficient members of society, current resources provided to such programs and other activities that assist homeless veterans are inadequate to provide all needed essential services, assistance, and support to homeless veterans.

(6) The CHALENG assessment referred to in paragraph (2) reports—

(A) that Department of Veterans Affairs and community providers were responsible for establishing almost 500 beds for homeless veterans during 2000, including emergency, transitional, and permanent beds; and

REV_00131559

(B) that there is a need for about 45,724 additional beds to meet current needs of homeless veterans.

(7) Nearly four decades ago, the Nation established a goal of sending a man to the moon and returning him safely to earth within a decade and accomplished that goal, and the Nation can do no less to end homelessness among the Nation's veterans.

(b) HOMELESS VETERAN DEFINED.—In this Act, the term ''homeless veteran'' means a veteran who is homeless (as that term is defined in section 103(a) of the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11302(a)).

SEC. 3. NATIONAL GOAL TO END HOMELESSNESS AMONG VETERANS.

(a) NATIONAL GOAL.—Congress hereby declares it to be a national goal to end homelessness among veterans within a decade.

(b) COOPERATIVE EFFORTS ENCOURAGED.—Congress hereby encourages all departments and agencies of Federal, State, and local governments, quasi-governmental organizations, private and public sector entities, including community-based organizations, and individuals to work cooperatively to end homelessness among veterans within a decade.

REV_00131560

Good morning.

Every major paper this morning has quotes from economic experts and analysts extolling the virtues of the tax cut for economic growth. And Democrats continue to come forward to defend the tax cut, saying just how important it is for the economy.

Remember to make this point to everyone you talk to today -- The President has taken immediate action on his strong economic recovery plan to cut taxes to get working families immediate help, to pay off historic levels of debt, and to increase trade to create American jobs and sell more goods and services to the world. The President's partisan opponents have no economic recovery plan whatsover. They have done nothing to help the economy while the President has sided with working families and acted immmediately.

If you read the papers today you will see that conventional wisdom is beginning to cement out there that President Bush is in touch with working families who are suffering because of the economy while his partisan opponents are in touch with their consultants on how to best play partisan budget games. Conventional wisdom among the economic experts has also cemented that the tax cut is going to help spur economic recovery.

And once again yesterday, you had the President talking about his priorities while his partisan opponents were talking about the old way of doing business in Washington with partisan budget games.

Here's a few news bites you should know about this morning regarding the budget, the economy and tax relief.

In a front page piece, the USA Today writes, "Economists predicted the combination of tax rebates, lower interest rates and lower energy costs would boost consumer spending and spur growth."

In the NY Times today, Bruce Steinberg -- chief economist at Merrill Lynch -- says, "We have $40 billion in tax rebate checks to support the consumer in the coming weeks" -- making the point that consumer spending is going to help boost our economy.

Following on Dem Senator Zell Miller's piece on the Washington Post this week excoriating Democrats for their tax cut attacks, Democrats today in the Washington Times are defending their tax cut votes, arguing the President's point that the tax cut is the best medicine for the economy. Sen. Baucus, Senator Carnahan, Senator Blanche Lincoln, Senator Ben Nelson and Rep. Rick Larsen all defend the tax cut. Sen. Nelson's office says the tax cut is, "probably the best step we've taken to get the economy moving again." Nelson's office also says that the surplus has declined because, "the economy is faltering."

The WSJ has an editorial this morning discussing France and tax increases. According to the editorial, "It strikes us that if even a French Socialist can realize that reversing tax cuts would be deadly to his chances in next year's elections, surely there's hope for the DNC. Anyone know if Terry McAuliffe reads French?" The President yesterday made it clear that he opposes tax increases because they would hurt our economy. Dick Gephardt and Senator Conrad have said in recent days that tax increases are an option. Be sure to remind people that their economic recovery plan is to take more money out of the pockets of the American people.

The LA Times reports, "Consumer spending over the next year is receiving a powerful boost from three sources, according to a Merrill Lynch analysis: $40 billion in federal tax rebates, $50 billion in reduced interest payments...."

Yesterday Commerce Secretary Evans received great news coverage with his arguments that increased trade is important to getting our economy moving again. Evans' emphasis on how trade can help our economy gives the President's trade agenda new momentum as Congress returns and gets ready to consider it.

Have a great day.

Carl Esbeck @ DOJ is putting final touches on some testimny to Senate Judiciary re. charitable choice, and in one response he quotes liberally from an OLC opinion.

These opinions aren't generally public documents, are they?

Should Esbeck instead delete the specific reference to the OLC opinion while rephrasing the rationale?

Thanks.

Many OLC opinions are in fact public. He should just be sure that he is quoting from public opinions.

Presidential Records Act Talking Points (August 31, 2001)

- The Presidential Records Act authorizes release of certain Presidential records beginning 12 years from the end of a Presidency, but also makes clear that the various Executive privileges (presidential communications, state secrets, deliberative process, attorney-client, and attorney work product privileges) still attach to Presidential records after the 12-year period has elapsed.

- The Act, which was enacted in 1978, is phrased is very general terms, however, and thus leaves open numerous questions about the appropriate legal framework and process under which the current and former President are to review Presidential records in the post-12-year period and to make decisions whether to withhold or disclose those records.

- This is the first time since the Act went into effect that the 12-year period has elapsed, so the Administration has had to carefully study and analyze the many substantive and procedural questions left open by the Act. Because the decision here likely will set a precedent for numerous Presidents to follow, it was especially important to study the issues closely.

- Judge Gonzales previously instructed the Archivist to extend until August 31, 2001, the time for release of the relevant Reagan records in order for the Administration to undertake this review of the many constitutional and legal questions raised by the potential release of sensitive and confidential Presidential records and to decide upon the proper legal framework and process to employ in reviewing such records on an ongoing basis.

- This legal review revealed a variety of available options. We were fully prepared, however, to make a decision by August 31 about the proper legal framework and process for ongoing review of Presidential records. But the Archivist recently suggested to Judge Gonzales that, before making a final decision, we would benefit from some additional consultation with the representatives of all three former Presidents subject to this Act, as well as review of a small sample of Presidential records. We accepted the Archivist's suggestion. Because this process of additional consultation and review necessarily will require several additional weeks, Judge Gonzales has instructed the Archivist to extend until October 19, 2001, the time in which the Administration will decide upon the proper legal framework and process for review of these Presidential records.

STATEMENT OF
ANTHONY J. PRINCIPI
SECRETARY
DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITEE ON HEALTH
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS
UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

September 6, 2001

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Subcommittee:

I am pleased to be here this morning to comment on H. R. 2792, the "Disabled Veterans Service Dog and Health Care Improvement Act of 2001." If enacted, this bill would authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to make service dogs available to disabled veterans and to make various other changes in health care benefits provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs. This morning I would like to briefly summarize the various sections of the bill, and provide VA's views of these sections.

Section 2 - Service Dogs

The bill would amend the existing law to expand VA's authority to provide guide dogs to blind veterans. Current law limits the provision of guide dogs to blind veterans who are entitled to disability compensation. The bill removes that limitation and would authorize VA to provide service dogs to veterans who are hearing impaired or who have spinal cord injury or dysfunction or other chronic impairment that substantially limits mobility. Service dogs can assist a disabled person in his or her daily life and can assist that person during medical emergencies. They can be trained in many tasks, including, but not limited to, pulling a wheelchair, carrying a back-pack, opening and closing doors, helping with dressing and undressing, retrieving dropped items, picking up the telephone, and hitting a distress button on the telephone. Some service dogs can perceive when the disabled individual is in distress and can find help. Dogs can also assist the hearing impaired by alerting them to doorbells, ringing phones, smoke detectors, crying babies, and emergency sirens on vehicles.

The existing statutory authority allows VA to pay for certain travel and incidental expenses incurred by veterans while adjusting to seeing-eye or guide dogs. The bill would amend the language to allow VA to pay these expenses for all guide dogs or service dogs covered by this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the benefit of guide dogs for the blind is well known, and we support having authority to also provide service dogs for veterans who are hearing impaired and who have spinal cord injuries or other chronic impairments, and to pay for certain costs associated with adjusting to the dogs. However, we believe the provision of guide dogs and service dogs should continue to be limited to veterans who are entitled to service-connected compensation. If this provision becomes law, we would promulgate prescription criteria and guidelines to insure that we provide dogs only to those veterans who can most benefit from them.

Section 3 - Maintaining Capacity

Section 3 of the bill addresses VA's statutory obligation to maintain the capacity to provide for the specialized treatment and rehabilitative needs of disabled veterans, including veterans with spinal cord dysfunction, blindness, amputations, and mental illness. As you know, Mr. Chairman, Congress imposed this requirement with the enactment of the Veterans' Health Care Eligibility Reform Act of 1996, Public Law 104-262. The law requires that capacity be maintained at its 1996 level. The bill would amend the statute to require that VA maintain this capacity not only in the Department as a whole, but within each geographic service area, or VISN, of the Veterans Health Administration. Additionally, the bill adds new language stating that the capacity to provide specialized treatment and rehabilitative needs of disabled veterans within distinct programs or facilities must be measured by the annual amount spent for the care of such veterans in dedicated programs that provide these services through specialized staff. VA's obligation to report on compliance with this requirement is extended through 2004.

Mr. Chairman, we do not object to the provision which would require maintenance of capacity within each geographic service area. This provision is consistent with our desire to ensure that there is equality of access to quality specialized services. However, in order to accomplish this, we propose that the capacity be based on the enrolled veteran population in each geographic service area. In addition, we oppose the provision that would measure capacity by dollars expended. The cost of care is not an adequate measure, by itself, to demonstrate whether VA is maintaining the quality of and access to specialized care. Cost alone is not a valid and reliable measure of capacity. Limiting the capacity report to measurement of dollars expended will neither indicate nor ensure that VA is upholding its commitment to these high priority patients. Capacity must be measured by the actual number of patients receiving care in the specialized programs, the quality of the care provided, patients' health outcomes, and patients' access to that care, including waiting times for appointments.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, it is currently not possible to know whether the amount of care and the dollars expended in 1996 were optimal for measuring capacity in the targeted special programs. The care provided in 1996 provides only a snapshot of what was then a rapidly changing VA health care delivery system. It is not clear that 1996 can or should serve as a baseline out to 2004, as proposed by this bill.

We understand that the staff of the Senate Veterans Affairs' Committee is developing a different position with regard to VA's obligation to maintain capacity. We would be happy to work with both the Senate and House staff on this issue to develop amendments that would allow us to provide the best possible information on VA's capacity for treating veterans with specialized treatment and rehabilitative needs.

Section 4 - Means Test Threshold

Mr. Chairman, section 4 would establish new geographically based income thresholds for VA to use in determining a non-service-connected veteran's priority for receiving VA care and whether the veteran must agree to pay copayments in order to receive that care. This would be an alternative to the threshold presently set by statute. As you know, Mr. Chairman, the law now requires that most veterans enroll in our health care system in order to receive care. Enrollees are placed in an enrollment priority group that is based, in many instances, on their level of income and net worth. Although we currently provide care to veterans in all enrollment priority groups, if there were medical care funding shortages in the future, it might be necessary to determine that those non-service connected veterans with relatively higher incomes must be disenrolled, meaning they could no longer receive VA care. Current law establishes, on a National basis, the specific income thresholds that we must use to determine the priority group of any given enrollee with no service-connected disability or other special status. We place higher income veterans in priority group 7 and lower income veterans in priority group 5.

This provision would establish a new, geographically based income threshold that VA could use for placing veterans in priority groups. It would utilize a poverty index developed by the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to establish this alternative income threshold. The income threshold for the veteran would be either the specific income thresholds set forth on a National basis, or the amount set forth by the HUD index - whichever is greater. In most instances, this new income threshold would be greater than the current statutory income threshold used for determining whether a veteran should be placed in priority group 5.

We are very interested in examining the use of geographically based income thresholds for placing nonservice-connected veterans in different enrollment priority groups. We recognize that the cost of living in large urban areas is much greater than in many more rural parts of the country. What might be considered a reasonably high income in some locations may be totally inadequate in other higher cost locations. However, at this time we cannot support the specific methodology proposed in this bill. There are many poverty indexes that are established in various ways, and there are serious issues about what these indexes really measure. We believe further study is needed to determine the most appropriate method for tackling this problem.

We are currently reviewing the various poverty indexes in order to identify the best way to proceed. We expect to have this work completed in September. We are also currently reviewing other changes to the means test, such as having only liquid assets counted and excluding dependent children's income from the process. We would be happy to work with staff members from the Congressional Committees to consider the alternative indexes and other changes to ensure that the means test for VA health care is equitable and affords reasonable access to VA health care services.

Section 5 - Pilot Program for Coordination of Ambulatory Community Hospital Care

Section 5 is a provision that is essentially the same as a measure passed by the House of Representatives last year despite the strong opposition of VA. The provision would establish a pilot program entitled "Coordination of Hospital Benefits Program." The program would authorize special benefits for some veterans receiving care in a VA outpatient clinic who need hospital care. Under the program, veterans with third-party health plan coverage (including Medicare and Medicaid) may receive different hospital care benefits from those without third-party coverage. Veterans with no third-party coverage of any sort would be offered hospital care in the nearest VA hospital with the ability to provide care. That facility may not be particularly close to where the veteran resides. On the other hand, veterans with third-party coverage would be offered a choice. First, they could choose to use the nearest VA hospital. Alternatively, they could choose to use a private facility, with VA paying for certain costs, such as the health plan deductible, coinsurance, or the cost of inpatient care or medical services that are not covered by the health plan.

The pilot program would be open only to veterans to whom VA "shall" furnish care, essentially all enrollees except those in enrollment priority group 7. To be eligible, the veterans must also meet certain additional conditions. Specifically, participants must be enrolled to receive medical services from a VA outpatient clinic, require hospital care for a non service-connected condition that could not be provided by a clinic operated by VA and elect to receive such care under the non-VA health care plan. The program would be limited to veterans who have received VA care during the 24-month period preceding the veteran's application to enroll in the pilot program. In designating the geographic areas in which to establish the program, VA must ensure that at least 70 percent of the veterans who reside in a designated area reside at least two hours' driving distance from the closest VA medical center.

The provision also limits expenditures for the pilot program to $50 million in any fiscal year. Moreover, funds from the proposal must come from the Medical Care Collections Fund and no funds may be used that are otherwise available for treating veterans requiring specialized care.

We strongly oppose this proposed pilot program. The proposal would create a disparate eligibility status based on a veteran's third-party coverage and priority group. We are also concerned that the program would undermine our ability to maintain existing services, especially specialized medical services and programs for veterans. Limiting care to general medical and surgical services would mean that veterans needing specialty health services would still need to come to VA for care. The health care covered by this proposal would be inpatient care for non-service-connected conditions. A veteran currently receiving care for a service-connected condition, for which VA does not or cannot contract locally, would also be forced to receive care in multiple locations. These types of disparities are not consistent with our goals and strategies of improving access, convenience, and timeliness of VA health care to all eligible veterans.

Funding for the program would be drawn from the Medical Care Collections Fund (MCCF). The Fund's collections, which are available to VA facilities to support current VA-provided medical care, would be reduced by this provision. MCCF collections supplement the dollars appropriated for medical care and are a necessary component of VHA's budget. Use of MCCF funds for this pilot would negatively impact care for veterans not enrolled in the pilot.

The bill would also require that not less that 15 percent of the veterans participating in the pilot program are veterans who do not have a health-care plan. This requirement is confusing, as the purpose of the pilot program is to allow VA to pay for the out of pocket costs that veterans incur through non-VA health plans. It is not clear how VA would achieve this goal for veterans who have no other health care plan. The 15 percent limit might be a false floor or ceiling, depending on the actual number of veterans at a particular pilot site that have no insurance. This could affect the potential outcomes of the pilot. If there are a large number of insured veterans, the out-of-pocket expense covered by VA would be less that the expense of covering the full care provided to an uninsured veteran. This could make the pilot look financially successful. On the other hand, if the number of non-insured veterans is high, the expenses could make the pilot program less financially viable.

The bill also defines the term "health-care plan" by cross-reference to section 1725(f). The bill states that the term "health-care plan" has the meaning given that term in section 1725(f)(3). However, the referenced section does not define the term health plan or health-care plan, but rather defines the term "third party" for purposes of reimbursement for emergency treatment. We believe that this reference might be an error, and that the intended reference was to section 1725(f)(2). Section 1725(f)(2) defines the term "health-plan contract" which includes, among other things, Medicare and Medicaid plans.

Section 6 - Pilot Program for Contract Hospitalization and Fee Basis Ambulatory Care

This section of the bill would require the Secretary to conduct a three-year pilot program in which veterans receiving fee basis and contract hospitalization would be provided such care through a contractor who acts as a managed care coordinator. The provision states that the program shall be conducted in four selected geographical areas that have mature managed care markets. To the extent practicable all fee basis and contract hospitalization provided by VA in the selected geographical service areas would be provided through the contractor. The contractor must be an experienced managed care coordinator with an in-place network of credentialed providers. All enrolled veterans in a selected geographical service area who are authorized to use non-VA care services through fee basis programs of the Department, or who are eligible for contract hospitalization, would be automatically enrolled for participation in the pilot program. Once approved to receive non-VA fee basis care, or when they seek care for a health emergency, participants would be given a directory of health care providers from which to choose.

In conducting the pilot program, VA would be required to use standards (commercial-industry or, in their absence, Department standards) for measuring access, timeliness, patient satisfaction, and utilization management. The contractor must establish a toll-free telephone system staffed by registered nurses to provide advice and health care referral information to veterans enrolled in the pilot program on a 24-hour a day, seven-day a week basis, and a veterans service telephone line for the provision of information on eligibility, enrollment, and provider locations. The program also must provide concurrent review, demand management, disease management and health and wellness programs.

Each medical center participating in the program must have a primary care manager. The primary care manager at each VA facility would be responsible for the coordination and case management of each enrolled veteran who is participating in the pilot program to ensure that such veterans receive the appropriate care, and that veterans are brought back into the VA system for follow-up whenever possible and appropriate. The pilot program includes extensive reporting requirements by VA, and a mandatory review by the Comptroller General.

We view the proposed pilot program as an opportunity to examine the costs and benefits of operating our fee basis care program in a new manner. We support the proposal.

Section 7 - Recodification of Bereavement Counseling and other Authorities

Mr. Chairman, section 7 of the bill would consolidate, in a new subchapter of title 38, United States Code, all of the various legal authorities under which VA provides services to non-veterans. The new subchapter would include a section on VA's provision of counseling, training and mental health services for family members of veterans who are receiving treatment. It would also include a section on bereavement counseling following the death of certain veterans. Both types of counseling are currently authorized in the definition of outpatient medical services. This change will make the authority much clearer.

The authority under which we provide CHAMPVA benefits, presently section 1713 of title 38, would be transferred to this new subchapter. A new provision in the bill provides that a dependent or survivor receiving CHAMPVA care would also be eligible for the bereavement counseling and the other counseling, training and mental health services provided to family members under this new subchapter. Finally, the existing authority to provide hospital care or medical services as a humanitarian service in emergency cases would be moved to this new subchapter.

The proposed changes would recodify the currently existing provisions. We support this change, as it would consolidate and clarify the existing statutory authority to provide care to non-veterans.

Section 8 – Extension of Expiring Collections Authorities

Mr. Chairman, this final provision would amend title 38 to extend VA's authority to collect per diem nursing home and hospital co-payments from certain veterans, and to collect third-party payments for the treatment of the nonservice-connected disabilities of veterans with service-connected disabilities. We strongly support and welcome the extensions proposed in this section. These collections constitute an important and necessary supplement to our annual appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, this ends my statement. I will be pleased to answer any questions you may have.

Phil: I am waiting for comments from Counsel's Office on the draft letter, but in the meantime, as per your instructions, I have prepared a yellow folder that includes WHO signoff. As I prepared it, the yellow folder is from you to Hector, with a cover memorandum from you to Hector, recommending that he sign the attached memorandum on Presidential Travel Support. I will hand carry this over to you, but I am also attaching electronic copies of both documents in the event that Hector determines that the signature authority should be at a higher level, or if you wish to make any changes. I am out on Tuesday, but feel free to page me or contact me at home (703) 392-9209 if you need anything further on this.

Brett: If you wish to make any changes, let me know and I can make them, or the electronic copies are attached below.

MEMORANDUM FOR HECTOR F. IRASTORZA, JR.
DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

FROM: PHILLIP D. LARSEN
SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT AND DIRECTOR OF THE OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION

SUBJECT: PRESIDENTIAL TRAVEL SUPPORT

The White House Office (WHO) has identified a critical need for the Office of Administration's (OA) assistance in providing information technology and financial management services in direct support of presidential travel. In order to meet this critical need, the WHO has requested the OA to provide information technology support on all trips, regardless of the nature of the travel, and financial management support on all official trips and for the official legs/events on mixed trips.

To memorialize this request, I recommend that you sign the attached memorandum. The memorandum serves three important purposes. First, the memorandum establishes that the services will be provided on behalf of the WHO, in direct support of the President as contemplated by Executive Order 12028 (Dec. 1977), as amended. Second, the memorandum determines that OA staff will be considered to be official travelers, necessary for the comfort and security of the President, consistent with the staffs of the Secret Service, the White House Communications Agency, and the Travel Office. Third, the memorandum confirms the intent of the WHO to maintain exclusive control over any White House materials generated by OA providing the services.

MEMORANDUM FOR PHILLIP D. LARSEN
DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION

FROM: HECTOR F. IRASTORZA, JR.
DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR
MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION

SUBJECT: PRESIDENTIAL TRAVEL SUPPORT

In order to effect the maximum utilization of existing services in accordance with Executive Order 12028 (Dec. 4, 1977), as amended, the Office of Administration (OA) shall, upon request, assist the White House Office (WHO) in providing those administrative services which are primarily in direct support of the President.

WHO staff has identified a critical need for OA's assistance in providing information technology and financial management services in direct support of presidential travel. In order to meet this critical need, OA is requested to provide, on behalf of WHO, information technology support on all trips, regardless of the nature of the travel, and financial management support on all official trips and for the official legs/events on mixed trips. OA personnel providing this support shall be considered official travelers on all trips. This is consistent with the 1997 advice from the Department of Justice which determined that staff considered necessary to provide fully for the comfort and safety of the President and Vice President are always official travelers, regardless of the nature of the trip.

It is understood that WHO is and shall remain the exclusive owner of all White House materials, including any materials generated by OA in the normal course in providing this support. Such materials are available to OA personnel only for such time and for such purposes as are necessary to render the requested services. OA shall not exercise any proprietary interest in White House materials that is inconsistent with this exclusive ownership. Once the services in question have been rendered, White House materials shall be promptly delivered to the White House Office of Records Management for proper disposition. In the event that OA determines it is necessary to retain these materials for a longer period to comply with statutory or regulatory requirements, OA is authorized to retain a duplicate, convenience copy for this purpose, which shall be destroyed when no longer needed.

Subject: FOIAs

As part of Cabinet report submissions, we are receiving information on key or significant FOIA requests received by the agencies. The staff secretary does not want to include these in the official cabinet report to the President - but is this information that you all would find useful? We could cut this into a separate FOIA report and send it to your shop - if there is an interest. Please let me know - thanks

Mr. Griffin:
Thank you for getting back to me today regarding my request for an interview with White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales. The topic is "why this moment in time is important in legal history." I am collecting responses from 10 legal luminaries including Stanford professor Deborah Rhode, Texas litigator Joe Jamail and NPR legal commentator Nina Totenberg for the ABA Journal's January, 2002 issue, a special edition featuring a cover story on legal history and the perception of justice. The issue will also mark the debut of the magazine's stem-to-stern redesign.
I am collecting comments one of two ways, according to the preference of the interviewees: Some are submitting written comments of 300-500 words, others are speaking with me directly and approving my paraphrasing of their comments.

Please let me know as soon as possible whether Mr. Gonzales would like to participate in this article, but no later than Friday, August 31. My deadline for collecting all comments is Monday, September 17. If he participates, the ABA would also like to have its photographers in Washington, D.C. take a photo of Mr. Gonzales at his convenience. Thank you for your time and attention.
Jenny B. Davis

P.S. I went to law school in Texas, practiced there and spent two years as a reporter for Texas Lawyer newspaper. I don't know if he misses Texas, but I sure do. I guess we've both gone national now ...

The independent commission does not fall under the Presidential Records Act. Thus, less onerous rules would apply to that body. I am not sure precisely what they are, however, but I can inquire if the commission does not have its own legal advisor.

Thanks! Just checking since I'm new to OPD and don't like loose ends. I'll call if questions arise. I am assuming that the same rules as for the WH and NEC (OPD) apply also to the President's Commission to Strengthen Social Security of which Chuck is Executive Director even though it's an independent commission. Please let me know if I am mistaken in this assumption. Thanks again.

My understanding is that they are going to reimburse CMS for the use of their plane, which CMS charters. I agree this sounds a little fishy. It may be worthwhile for one of you to call the Michigan Party to determine exactly what they are paying for and how it's being reported. Thanks. I would be happy to facilitate the call.

Conceptually, yes, the RNC can pay for this. A few questions:
Who is coming? If we have some political invitees, then that would be helpful if the political entity is paying. Also, is the President speaking?

Karl is suggesting we hold our Mexican Independence Day celebration at the White House similar to the one we held for Cinco de Mayo. We will need to fund 10K for stage, entertainment and lighting. What are the legalities involved in either raising this money by donations or asking the RNC?

Good. You should go ahead and initiate the admin processes to have the RNC pay; I believe Merrill Hughes and Anita McBride can help with that.

Finally, I think this is the key.

Pub. L. 106-553, Dec. 21, 2000, 114 Stat. 2762 provided that "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, not to exceed $10,000,000 of the funds made available in this Act . . . may be used to extablish and publicize a program under which publicly advertised, extraordinary rewards may be paid, which shall not be subject to spending limiations contained in sections 3059 and 3072 of title 18 . . . ." but any reward of $100,000 up to a max of $2 million may not be made w/o personal approval of AG or POTUS (non- delegable).

Sorry for piecemeal e-mails. I'm still looking further.

What I've learned from the FAA is that transponders generally are turned on only between take-off and landing and are turned off while an airplane is on the ground. The option to turn the transponder off is needed because at the airport while the planes are on the ground there are too many planes in too small an area, and the signals sent out by the transponders interfere with ground systems. Also, I'm told that in-flight transponder malfunctions sometimes have to be addressed by turning the transponder off and then back on again.

I just left a message for him. I have been dealing with OLC on this (as has Noel), although I know and knew nothing about this DOL memo.
I will check with Willett as well.

I have a feeling that this issue wasn't assigned to anyone over here, because I got the same inquiry from Howard a couple weeks ago and sent out a similar e-mail to everyone in this office, and obviously no one has called Howard about it yet.

The Solicitor's Office at DOL called to see what ever happened with the memo they sent over on the constitutionality of certain faith-based programs. They said Stuart was the original recipient. Could whoever is handling this now call Howard Radzley's assistant 202-693-5271. Thanks.

Subject: OLC Assignments

Tim,

I understand that you asked OLC (John Yoo) to look at the two issues that you asked me to address: insurance coverage and forbearance on payments. I coincidentally called John to discuss one of the two issues, and he said that you had already spoken with him. We are coordinating our efforts.

John mentioned that it is useful for him to know who in the Counsel's Office is working on a matter, so that he knows to whom to talk for further information and to whom to send any final product.

So if anyone is working on a legal question, you might touch base with John Yoo to see who at OLC is addressing the question.

THE HONORABLE BOB LIVINGSTON

Former Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee

HOSTED BY:

MIKE FRANC

Vice President, Government Relations, The Heritage Foundation

In early August, The Heritage Foundation asked Chairman Livingston to share his thoughts on the coming crisis in U.S. defense spending. In the light of last Tuesday's tragic events it has become clear that the real crisis is not just one of dollars, but of how those dollars are spent. If America's armed forces are going to both eradicate the terrorists who perpetrated last week's violent acts, and at the same time ensure the safety of the nation, there must be a comprehensive reconfiguration of the military's offensive and defensive capabilities. Please join us this Thursday as we examine the budgetary and strategic implications the devastation of September 11, 2001 will have on our country's military.

THE PRICE OF SECURITY:
THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION'S CASE FOR INCREASING DEFENSE SPENDING

FEATURING:

DOV ZAKHEIM

Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) and Chief Financial Officer for the Department of Defense

HOSTED BY:

KIM HOLMES

Vice President and Director, Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis
Institute for International Studies

Ten years after the end of the Cold War, the U.S. military is in a condition that eerily resembles its condition in 1980. It suffers from underfunding and low morale, with years of fiscal neglect resulting in aging equipment and substandard living conditions for personnel. Hoping to reverse these dangerous trends, Congress approved a $14 billion increase in defense spending for FY 2002. The Pentagon and the Bush White House, however, assert that $14 billion can't even come close to meeting the overwhelming needs of the U.S. military. Just to stop the decline of the U.S. armed forces the Administration has requested an additional $18 billion in defense spending, bringing the total increase to $32 billion. In the wake of the shrinking budget surplus will Congress agree to the Administration's request? Please join us on September 24, as Undersecretary of Defense Dov Zakheim argues the Administration's case.

President Bush delivers his first address at the United Nations on September 24, during the 56th session of the General Assembly. His remarks will establish the framework for the Administration's involvement in the UN at a time of turbulence in the US-UN relationship. To offer insights and perspectives on how the United States can effectively promote its interests in the UN system, we are pleased to present the Honorable Jeane Kirkpatrick, the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations during the Reagan Administration, on September 24. Please join us for this timely discussion with Ambassador Kirkpatrick - the US Ambassador who took the "kick me" sign off the United States during another troubled time in the US-UN relationship.

On July 16 2001, the presidents of Russia and China signed the Treaty for Good Neighborliness, Friendship and Cooperation in Moscow. This treaty is the first such agreement between these two Eurasian powers since Mao Tse-tung signed a treaty with Joseph Stalin of the U.S.S.R. in 1950. Six days later, on July 22 2001 in Genoa, Italy, Russian President Vladimir Putin and U.S. President George Bush agreed that a U.S. missile defense could proceed, accompanied by large nuclear arms cuts by both nations. This announcement effectively meant the end of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. The signing of one treaty and the abrogation of the other should signal to the Western world that a major geopolitical shift may be taking place in the Eurasian balance of power, with serious implications for the United States and its alliances. Please join us on September 25th as we examine just what those implications may be.

Sudan's 18-year-old civil war has claimed the lives of more than 2 million people, displaced about 5 million people inside the country, and sent another half-million into exile. In recent years, Sudan's radical Islamic regime, dominated by Muslim Arabs from northern Sudan, has escalated the onslaught against an opposition coalition composed predominantly of black Christians and animists living in the south to genocidal proportions. It has resorted to systematic bombing of civilians, starvation, slavery, ethnic cleansing, religious persecution, and other human rights abuses to break the will of the opposition. Furthermore, the Sudanese dictatorship is on the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism and hosted Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the recent New York and Washington terrorist attacks, until 1996. What role can the United States play in stopping these atrocities and bringing a stable peace to Sudan?

THE NATIONAL SECURITY CRISIS

Featuring

THE HONORABLE BOB LIVINGSTON

Former Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee

HOSTED BY:

MIKE FRANC

Vice President, Government Relations, The Heritage Foundation

In early August, The Heritage Foundation asked Chairman Livingston to share his thoughts on the coming crisis in U.S. defense spending. In the light of last Tuesday's tragic events it has become clear that the real crisis is not just one of dollars, but of how those dollars are spent. If America's armed forces are going to both eradicate the terrorists who perpetrated last week's violent acts, and at the same time ensure the safety of the nation, there must be a comprehensive reconfiguration of the military's offensive and defensive capabilities. Please join us this Thursday as we examine the budgetary and strategic implications the devastation of September 11, 2001 will have on our country's military.

THE PRICE OF SECURITY:

FEATURING:

DOV ZAKHEIM

Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) and Chief Financial Officer for the Department of Defense

HOSTED BY:

KIM HOLMES

Vice President and Director, Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis
Institute for International Studies

Ten years after the end of the Cold War, the U.S. military is in a condition that eerily resembles its condition in 1980. It suffers from underfunding and low morale, with years of fiscal neglect resulting in aging equipment and substandard living conditions for personnel. Hoping to reverse these dangerous trends, Congress approved a $14 billion increase in defense spending for FY 2002. The Pentagon and the Bush White House, however, assert that $14 billion can't even come close to meeting the overwhelming needs of the U.S. military. Just to stop the decline of the U.S. armed forces the Administration has requested an additional $18 billion in defense spending, bringing the total increase to $32 billion. In the wake of the shrinking budget surplus will Congress agree to the Administration's request? Please join us on September 24, as Undersecretary of Defense Dov Zakheim argues the Administration's case.

HOSTED BY:

DAN FISK

Deputy Director,
Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis Institute for International Studies,
The Heritage Foundation

President Bush delivers his first address at the United Nations on September 24, during the 56th session of the General Assembly. His remarks will establish the framework for the Administration's involvement in the UN at a time of turbulence in the US-UN relationship. To offer insights and perspectives on how the United States can effectively promote its interests in the UN system, we are pleased to present the Honorable Jeane Kirkpatrick, the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations during the Reagan Administration, on September 24. Please join us for this timely discussion with Ambassador Kirkpatrick - the US Ambassador who took the "kick me" sign off the United States during another troubled time in the US-UN relationship.

On July 16 2001, the presidents of Russia and China signed the Treaty for Good Neighborliness, Friendship and Cooperation in Moscow. This treaty is the first such agreement between these two Eurasian powers since Mao Tse-tung signed a treaty with Joseph Stalin of the U.S.S.R. in 1950. Six days later, on July 22 2001 in Genoa, Italy, Russian President Vladimir Putin and U.S. President George Bush agreed that a U.S. missile defense could proceed, accompanied by large nuclear arms cuts by both nations. This announcement effectively meant the end of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. The signing of one treaty and the abrogation of the other should signal to the Western world that a major geopolitical shift may be taking place in the Eurasian balance of power, with serious implications for the United States and its alliances. Please join us on September 25th as we examine just what those implications may be.

Sudan's 18-year-old civil war has claimed the lives of more than 2 million people, displaced about 5 million people inside the country, and sent another half-million into exile. In recent years, Sudan's radical Islamic regime, dominated by Muslim Arabs from northern Sudan, has escalated the onslaught against an opposition coalition composed predominantly of black Christians and animists living in the south to genocidal proportions. It has resorted to systematic bombing of civilians, starvation, slavery, ethnic cleansing, religious persecution, and other human rights abuses to break the will of the opposition. Furthermore, the Sudanese dictatorship is on the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism and hosted Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the recent New York and Washington terrorist attacks, until 1996. What role can the United States play in stopping these atrocities and bringing a stable peace to Sudan?

THE NATIONAL SECURITY CRISIS

Featuring

THE HONORABLE BOB LIVINGSTON

Former Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee

HOSTED BY:

MIKE FRANC

Vice President, Government Relations, The Heritage Foundation

In early August, The Heritage Foundation asked Chairman Livingston to share his thoughts on the coming crisis in U.S. defense spending. In the light of last Tuesday's tragic events it has become clear that the real crisis is not just one of dollars, but of how those dollars are spent. If America's armed forces are going to both eradicate the terrorists who perpetrated last week's violent acts, and at the same time ensure the safety of the nation, there must be a comprehensive reconfiguration of the military's offensive and defensive capabilities. Please join us this Thursday as we examine the budgetary and strategic implications the devastation of September 11, 2001 will have on our country's military.

THE PRICE OF SECURITY:

FEATURING:

DOV ZAKHEIM

Under Secretary of Defense (Comptroller) and Chief Financial Officer for the Department of Defense

HOSTED BY:

KIM HOLMES

Vice President and Director, Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis
Institute for International Studies

Ten years after the end of the Cold War, the U.S. military is in a condition that eerily resembles its condition in 1980. It suffers from underfunding and low morale, with years of fiscal neglect resulting in aging equipment and substandard living conditions for personnel. Hoping to reverse these dangerous trends, Congress approved a $14 billion increase in defense spending for FY 2002. The Pentagon and the Bush White House, however, assert that $14 billion can't even come close to meeting the overwhelming needs of the U.S. military. Just to stop the decline of the U.S. armed forces the Administration has requested an additional $18 billion in defense spending, bringing the total increase to $32 billion. In the wake of the shrinking budget surplus will Congress agree to the Administration's request? Please join us on September 24, as Undersecretary of Defense Dov Zakheim argues the Administration's case.

FEATURING:

Former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations

HOSTED BY:

DAN FISK

Deputy Director,
Kathryn and Shelby Cullom Davis Institute for International Studies,
The Heritage Foundation

President Bush delivers his first address at the United Nations on September 24, during the 56th session of the General Assembly. His remarks will establish the framework for the Administration's involvement in the UN at a time of turbulence in the US-UN relationship. To offer insights and perspectives on how the United States can effectively promote its interests in the UN system, we are pleased to present the Honorable Jeane Kirkpatrick, the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations during the Reagan Administration, on September 24. Please join us for this timely discussion with Ambassador Kirkpatrick - the US Ambassador who took the "kick me" sign off the United States during another troubled time in the US-UN relationship.

HOSTED BY:

On July 16 2001, the presidents of Russia and China signed the Treaty for Good Neighborliness, Friendship and Cooperation in Moscow. This treaty is the first such agreement between these two Eurasian powers since Mao Tse-tung signed a treaty with Joseph Stalin of the U.S.S.R. in 1950. Six days later, on July 22 2001 in Genoa, Italy, Russian President Vladimir Putin and U.S. President George Bush agreed that a U.S. missile defense could proceed, accompanied by large nuclear arms cuts by both nations. This announcement effectively meant the end of the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. The signing of one treaty and the abrogation of the other should signal to the Western world that a major geopolitical shift may be taking place in the Eurasian balance of power, with serious implications for the United States and its alliances. Please join us on September 25th as we examine just what those implications may be.

Sudan's 18-year-old civil war has claimed the lives of more than 2 million people, displaced about 5 million people inside the country, and sent another half-million into exile. In recent years, Sudan's radical Islamic regime, dominated by Muslim Arabs from northern Sudan, has escalated the onslaught against an opposition coalition composed predominantly of black Christians and animists living in the south to genocidal proportions. It has resorted to systematic bombing of civilians, starvation, slavery, ethnic cleansing, religious persecution, and other human rights abuses to break the will of the opposition. Furthermore, the Sudanese dictatorship is on the State Department's list of state sponsors of terrorism and hosted Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the recent New York and Washington terrorist attacks, until 1996. What role can the United States play in stopping these atrocities and bringing a stable peace to Sudan?

On Craig. He will likely be the one possible lead on opposition on the GOP side. Jade West thought that the members would take a wait and see attitude untill more details were available, but that at some point Members would oppose. She expressed concern that we would look opportunistic and hurt chances to get out of town quickly. Kyl included some language in the CJS bill on Thursday, which raised some problems with GOP members, but was taken by voice vote to avoid any confrontation.

Nickles. Stewart Verdery attended the meeting with Nickles. He believes Hatch, Kyl, McConnell and possibly Sessions will be supportive of moving a package and thinks we need to bring in Ashcroft to talk to Members and take on those that might be opposed by fingering them publicly. Craig is likely to be the opponent to provisions in this legislation. On the Dem. side, Stewart thought Leahy, Feingold would be opposed to some of the provisions, while Feinstien would support.

Kristen has asked that we prepare a memo from the Judge to the President to be attached to his briefing memo on tomorrow's meeting on the DOJ Legislation. She asked that it be short (no more than 2 pages) and include a summary and highlight the key provisions and most likely controversies. Brett and I will put something together. Kristen said it can be "slipped" into the briefing tomorrow morning. We'll try to get you a draft before going into our 7 o'clock meeting tonight.

Here is two of two comments from Glenn (OMB/OIRA)

Section 103 also redefines the scope of applicability for a pen register and trap and trace device by adding "or other dialing, routing, addressing, and signaling information relevant to identifying the source of a wire or electronic communication;".

The significant language is underlined above and would in effect allow the collection of content without a full wiretap court order. This is the very essence of the Carnivore controversy.

Adding "electronic" means e-mail and other computer-based communications.
So, Pen/Traps are no longer just telephone caller ID. They also become collectors of e-mail header information which includes the "to and from" and the subject, etc. Anything more than "to and from" is content and currently requires a probable cause court order v. the pen/trap's lesser "relevant to an ongoing investigation" standard.

To clear this provision, Justice should have to demonstrate an explicit need. Their sectional analysis speaks in terms of equalizing telephone and Internet communications. They are not equal. Caller ID on Internet comms includes content and they already have ample authority to get a probable cause court order for that.

I realize that you must be overwhelmed with far more urgent and important matters, and will be for some time to come, and hope you are able to cope with it all.

However, I did want to check on whether you are likely to get back to the PRA EO issue any time soon, particularly in light of Chairman Horn's hearing currently scheduled for Oct. 5. If you think the issue will now be delayed for some time, then should you, or we, recommend that Horn postpone the hearing? (Otherwise, we will begin to work on draft testimony for the Archivist.)

We will do our best to minimize our burden on your time for the near future, but we will still need to clear special access openings through you in response to SDNY, Chairman Burton, and some DOJ litigation. (Brad and I have exchanged calls on a separate case.)

Please let me know if we can be of assistance on any matters. Thanks and good luck.

Subject: Update from our anti-terrorism meeting tonight

We met with bi-cam Judiciary Committee Republican staff (Sensenbrenner and Hatch's folks) and Senate Republican Staff (Stewart Verdery and Sharon Soderstrom) tonight re: proceeding on anti-terrorism package. Other participants included: WH Counsel, OMB, WH Domestic Policy, WH Leg, DOJ Leg and VP Leg.

Here's a summary of how we agreed to proceed, as well as some issues that were discussed:

Dan Bryant made the point that Leahy's principals (he hasn't provided us with legislative language) include a lot of surveillance provisions that are in our package, or provisions that were in our original package that we could add back in, giving Leahy credit. However, we can't support Leahy's provisions title "Strengthening Our Domestic Security Against Terrorist Acts" because we don't have time right now to be dealing with organizational/restructuring initiatives in the FBI -- we need to be focusing on the current investigation. We want a narrow/targeted package.

Biden may want to "strengthen" our package by adding back in some of the provisions that we dropped in our internal package. May be a good way to get his buy in and active support.

The President needs to make clear in his speech tomorrow night that he wants to move this package quickly! This will be the best way to put the pressure on Leahy as well as Armey.

Sensenbrenner's staff says Sensenbrenner is committed to building bi-partisan support for this bill and moving very quickly: They are planning on a Monday hearing next week and a Tuesday markup (tentative). We have a short week next week, so no chance for House floor action, but it could then be ready for floor action the week after next. This fast movement in the House will keep positive pressure on Leahy.

Leahy is scheduled to have a hearing on Tuesday. Ashcroft will testify according to DoJ.

A House briefing is set up for relevant House staff tomorrow at 1:30am. It's a bi-partisan briefing.

We will also hold a Senate relevant committee staff, bi-partisan, briefing tomorrow. Tentative time is 4:00pm.

Separately, we will meet with Leahy's staff and Daschle's staff, prior to the broader bi-part briefing. With Leahy, our message is "what can't you live with in our package"; with Daschle our message is "we may need your help moving this if Leahy drags his feet; be assured we will do everything we can to proceed in a bi-part manner".

If Leahy bolts, Makan believes we can get Schumer, Feinstein and Biden to push through alternative process. Leahy, Feingold and Durbin will be our problems. Schumer and Hillary will want to be all over this.

We will need to decide internally and with Republican leadership what our deadline is for having a Senate bill introduced. We need to communicate this deadline to Leahy, and have Schumer lined up for "Plan B".

Specter will need special attention on the FISA provisions; Kennedy will control where Leahy comes down on the immigration provisions (Sharon Prost to talk to Kennedy's staff tomorrow).

Grover Norquist -- Karl Rove is supposedly addressing Grover's opposition to the package. Grover certainly can't know yet what's in the package; maybe we should arrange a briefing for him here?

NRA has no interest in opposing the bill; they will let us know tomorrow if they have any constructive changes/suggestions.

The hearings reportedly will be on legislative proposals designed to combat terrorism. We have not received the Attorney General's testimony for clearance for either the hearing on Monday afternoon or the hearing on Tuesday. Our contact in Justice's Office of Legislative Affairs tells us that he hasn't seen any testimony either and does not know if he will. He says that "if it shows up he will pass it along." He guesses that it will explain what is in the legislative package that has been given to the Hill. The House Judiciary Committee is tentatively scheduled to mark up legislative proposals on Tuesday.

MEMORANDUM TO HEADS OF ALL DEPARTMENTS AND AGENCIES
Re: The Freedom of Information Act

As you know, the Department of Justice and this Administration are committed to full compliance with the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA), 5 U.S.C. § 552 (2000), and to maintaining an open and accountable government. The FOIA embodies the importance of disseminating government information in a democracy -- a core value of our society. Indeed, it is only through a well-informed citizenry that the leaders of our nation remain accountable to the governed and the American people can be assured that neither fraud nor government waste is concealed.

The Department of Justice and this Administration are equally committed to protecting other fundamental values that are held by our society. Among them are safeguarding our national security, enhancing the effectiveness of our law enforcement agencies, protecting sensitive business information and, not least, preserving personal privacy. The right to privacy, in particular, must not be unduly infringed, especially in this time of rapidly advancing technology.

Our citizens have a strong interest as well in a government that is fully functional and efficient. Congress and the courts have long recognized that certain legal privileges ensure candid and complete agency deliberations without fear that these deliberations will be made public. Other privileges ensure that lawyers' deliberations and communications are kept private. No leader can operate effectively without confidential advice and counsel. Exemption 5 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), recognizes these privileges and the sound policy reasons underlying them.

I encourage your agency to carefully consider the protection of all such values and interests when making disclosure determinations under the FOIA. While your agency's FOIA officers may continue to make discretionary disclosures of exempt information, solely as a matter of administrative discretion, they should do so only with full regard for the institutional, commercial, and personal privacy interests that can be implicated in sensitive information.

In making these decisions, you should consult with the Department of Justice's Office of Information and Privacy when significant FOIA policy issues arise, as well as with our Civil Division on FOIA litigation matters. When you carefully consider FOIA requests and decide to withhold records, in whole or in part, please be assured that the Department of Justice will defend your decisions unless they lack a sound legal basis or present an unwarranted risk of adverse impact on the ability of other agencies to protect other important records.

This memorandum supersedes former Attorney General Janet Reno's FOIA memorandum dated October 4, 1993, and likewise creates no substantive or procedural right enforceable at law.

We still hope to stay at least somewhat close to the decision schedule I outlined to you before Sept 11, and I hope to be in touch this week with you about where we are. That said, it seems quite unlikely that we will be closed before October 5, and I would suggest to George that he think about postponing for a few weeks. Let me know if that creates any problems.

Subject: Update

I realize that you must be overwhelmed with far more urgent and important matters, and will be for some time to come, and hope you are able to cope with it all.

However, I did want to check on whether you are likely to get back to the issue any time soon, particularly in light of Chairman Horn's hearing currently scheduled for Oct. 5. If you think the issue will now be delayed for some time, then should you, or we, recommend that Horn postpone the hearing? (Otherwise, we will begin to work on draft testimony for the Archivist.)
PRA EO

We will do our best to minimize our burden on your time for the near future, but we will still need to clear special access openings through you in response to SDNY, Chairman Burton, and some DOJ litigation. (Brad and I have exchanged calls on a separate case.)

Please let me know if we can be of assistance on any matters. Thanks and good luck.

DRAFT

Dear Tom:

We have received your question about the intended scope of Section 408 (b) of the Airline Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act. The plain language of Section 408 (b) of the Act provides that all legal claims and cases encompassed by that section – against any defendant, including, but not limited to air carriers – must be brought in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York. That court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all such actions. The plain language conforms to the agreement reached by the House leadership, the Senate leadership and the Administration, and to the intent of the parties in drafting this section. Section 408 (a), by contrast, which speaks to limitations on liability, applies only to air carriers as defined.

We appreciate and understand your desire for additional legislation with respect to any litigation arising out of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. The Administration will be working closely with Congress to assess the need for additional legislative action following the initial legislation.

Sincerely,

Brett Kavanaugh
Associate Counsel to the President

In today's admin meeting we discussed the recent move. Our team leader, Brent will be contacted to do a walk through of all of the offices and figure out what needs still have not been met. We are to remember to be patient about trash, burn bag and newspaper services. In the next few weeks we will be receiving a draft of the updated telephone directories.

Everyone should have received the Admin Alert that went out today regarding the use of Signal and the White House Operator. All boards have been very busy lately and we are encouraged to use our division staff directories as well as the telephone directory to help out. Unless you are a commissioned officer or calling on behalf of one, you should use the White House Operator (456-1414) for assistance instead of Signal. Some of the individuals that Signal was designed to assist have not been able to get through. Thanks in advance for your cooperation.

Most likely, later today, we are going to be staffing a Presidential emergency designation for $5 Billion in grants to compensate air carriers for direct losses resulting from the September 11, 2001 attacks, specifically,, from the order by the Secretary of Transportation to ground all aircraft immediately. We also will most likely be staffing a Presidential Delegation of Authority delegating the authority to administer the funds to the Secretary of Transportation. Please be looking for these or have someone on your staff looking for them. We would appreciate an immediate response to both. Thanks.

I think on the loan gurantee side, the only real question in terms of drafters' intent is whether the loans should be short term relief accross the board, or short term relief directed to those who can survive and sustain the industry longer term. And Mitch feels strongly it should lean in the latter direction.

We are reaching out to all the key members on this question as well.

The meeting today will focus more on the various types of terms and conditions for the loans and the process for applications.

Apparently, in 1996, it was a bad thing to have a litmus test on judicial nominees. Hmmm. Wonder why?

Well, attached is a lengthy dissertation that I think may come in handy in Clear and Present Danger:

The New Far Right Judicial Litmus Test

On April 19, in a speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors (ASNE), Senator Bob Dole aimed a full-scale political attack at President Clinton's federal judicial appointments.[1] Several months earlier, spurred by a ruling excluding evidence in a major narcotics case by a judge nominated by President Clinton (and approved without objection by Senator Dole and his colleagues), Senator Dole and others had initiated the attack, claiming that the President's nominations proved that he was "soft on crime."[2] The attacks have continued after the ASNE speech, and are likely to be a key part of Dole's campaign strategy in the 1996 campaign.

One significant aspect of the recent attacks on judicial nominees, however, has gone largely unnoticed. An important stimulus and source of ammunition for the attack has been far right political groups and operatives, ranging from Paul Weyrich's Free Congress Foundation to Gary Bauer's Family Research Council. This includes individuals and organizations that have formed close connections with Senator Dole and other Republicans, worked with the Reagan and Bush administrations on judicial selection, and played an important role in the conservative "litmus test" philosophy used in picking judges in the 1980s. In 1996, the evidence from their articles, direct mail, and other pronouncements makes clear that their objectives go far beyond simply using judicial nominations as an issue in the election, or even returning to the Reagan-Bush litmus test. Instead, the agenda of these advocates is to impose a new far right litmus test on judicial nominations, avoiding what they perceive as the imperfections of the Reagan-Bush era and ensuring that new Supreme Court justices and other federal judges have "an established commitment to the conservative legal movement."[3]

This report will trace the development of the new far right judicial litmus test, beginning with its origins in the Reagan Administration and continuing with recent efforts to press it on lawmakers (including Senator Dole and the Clinton Administration). It will also examine some of the serious potential consequences of this campaign. Even on the issue of crime control, the facts demonstrate that the right-wing attacks are without basis and that the imposition of a far right judicial litmus test would actually harm crime control efforts. In addition, it would seriously harm the fundamental rights of all Americans in such areas as religious freedom, civil rights, and reproductive rights.

For example, as a result of the right-wing litmus test used under the Reagan and Bush administrations, we have already seen:

- Court decisions striking down federal crime control efforts, such as the Gun Free School Zones Act, the Child Support Recovery Act, and parts of the federal arson law
- Virtual exclusion of African-Americans from nomination as federal judges under Reagan and Bush
- A court ruling that the Violence Against Women Act, enacted by a bipartisan congressional majority in 1994, is unconstitutional
- A Supreme Court decision authorizing significant burdens on religion, overturned by an act of Congress which itself has been challenged as unconstitutional
- A state ban on all abortions at public facilities, including even at private hospitals or clinics which lease space from public agencies
- A Supreme Court ruling that even outright lies by an employer can rebut a case of job discrimination unless the victim can provide direct evidence of bias

With numerous vacancies expected in the near future on the federal courts, including the Supreme Court, imposition of a new right wing judicial litmus test threatens to cause even more harm in the future.

The Development of the New Far Right Judicial Litmust Test

At least since the Supreme Court's 1973 decision in Roe v. Wade, religious right and other conservatives have focused on the federal courts as both an important source of and a potential solution to their complaints on such issues as abortion, religion, and federal authority. While Presidents throughout history have sought to put their stamp on the federal judiciary, the Reagan and Bush administrations took this to a new level, imposing a "litmus test" selection philosophy that itself already has produced substantial harm and has set the stage for today's new far right litmus test.

The Reagan-Bush Litmus Test

The history of judicial selection under Presidents Reagan and Bush begins at least as early as the 1980 Republican Party platform. The platform called for the President to appoint:

> women and men who respect and reflect the values of the American people, and whose judicial philosophy is characterized by the highest regard for protecting the rights of law-abiding citizens . . . [and] who respect traditional values and the sanctity of innocent human life.

Candidate Reagan embraced this philosophy, whether discussing abortion ("the sanctity of innocent human life") or other issues. "There must be new Justices on the Court," Reagan proclaimed, "who respect and reflect the values of the American majority. I pledge to make such appointments."

Once elected, President Reagan systematically sought to fulfill his pledge. Both the Reagan and Bush administrations took a concerted approach of selecting judges to seek to ensure a particular ideological bent. These administrations pre-screened candidates for ideology, appointed youthful conservative judges, looked for academics with proven conservative track records, and rejected insufficiently "pure" nominees.

The Reagan administration subjected every candidate for the bench to a series of interviews with a battery of Justice Department lawyers. Those that survived this winnowing process went on to meet with the Attorney General and undergo scrutiny by a special White House standing committee. While the content of these interviews is a matter of some dispute, Reagan administration officials acknowledged that specific legal precedents were discussed. In particular, administration officials commonly asked candidates their views on Roe v. Wade, which established a woman's constitutional right to reproductive privacy. Although Reagan Attorney General Ed Meese claimed no interest in how prospective judges would rule in specific cases,[4] several judicial nominees stated they were asked directly about their views on abortion.[5] One rejected candidate stated: "I guess most of us have accepted that we're not going to get these judgeships unless we're willing to commit to a particular position, which we think would be improper."[6]

The second element of the Reagan appointment strategy was to select young nominees. According to the ABA Journal:

> Since the enactment of the Circuit Courts of Appeals Act of 1891, no other president, starting with Benjamin Harrison, appointed appeals court judges with a younger average age than has Ronald Reagan during his second term. And no other president has appointed such a high proportion of appeals court judges under the age of 45 (more than one-third during the second term).[7]

This emphasis on youth contributed to the ideological makeup of the federal judiciary in two ways. First, it gave judges time to build a proven track record for a possible nomination to the Supreme Court, which could also occur at a relatively early age. Second, even those judges who were not elevated to the Supreme Court could be expected to serve lengthy terms, preserving a conservative judiciary for future decades.

A third prong of the Reagan judicial selection strategy was the reliance on law professors. At least until the rejection of Robert Bork's Supreme Court nomination, Reagan judge-pickers regarded academic careers as a means of predicting likely performance on the bench. Since most professors must publish or perish, they often have a long paper trail demonstrating their ideological preferences.

Finally, and perhaps most important, the Reagan administration consistently rejected even mainstream Republicans who failed to tow the ideological line. One nominee, first in her law school class and highly rated by the ABA, was rejected because she had supported the Equal Rights Amendment (as had the Republican party itself until 1980) and several conservative groups had falsely charged her as being a closet Democrat. Another candidate, a former Deputy Solicitor General, was rejected by Administration supporters for having made small donations to Planned Parenthood and the National Coalition to Ban Handguns; thirteen senators demanded his withdrawal, and the President obliged. Prominent Republican Philip Lacovara, who had been appointed twice by Reagan to serve on the District of Columbia Nominating Commission, was rejected on the grounds that he was "too liberal" and "not politically reliable,"[8] based on his membership in two decidedly establishment organizations, the Washington Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights Under Law and the ABA Section on Individual Rights and Responsibilities. Lacovara wrote in the New York Times that in the past:

> political affiliation has provided a source of recognition, not a litmus test for philosophical orthodoxy. Over time, this pattern has created a Federal judiciary rich in diversity and perspective. Today the message is quite different: ideology is the primary qualification, and it is a candidate's demonstrated orthodoxy that brings his name before the President and ultimately before the Senate. Unique in our nation's history, the current Justice Department has been processing any judicial candidate through a series of officials whose primary duty is to assess the candidate's ideological purity.[9]

The Bush administration continued the demand for ideological purity in judicial nominations. Just four days after Bush's inauguration, White House Counsel C. Boyden Gray declared that Bush "will continue to appoint judges in the Reagan manner."[10] The editorial pages of the Wall Street Journal praised the young conservative lawyers from the Federalist Society and elsewhere chosen to staff the process,[11] and conservative commentators lauded President Bush's appointments. Clint Bolick, Vice President of the right-wing Institute for Justice, described the Bush appointment record as "a tour de force . . . . He has been even better than Reagan. Bush has made the judiciary more solidly conservative without spending a lot of political capital on the issue."[12] Former Reagan Attorney General Ed Meese stated that his successors "have done an excellent job . . . . The results are the same as in the Reagan administration."[13]

In large measure, the Reagan-Bush litmus test proved quite successful. During the 1980s and into the 1990s, the country witnessed a major retreat by the federal courts from their traditional role of defenders of liberty in such areas as civil rights, religious freedom, and reproductive choice.[14] As the late Justice Thurgood Marshall wrote in his final dissent on the Supreme Court, the Court majority was sending a "clear signal that scores of established constitutional liberties are now ripe for reconsideration" as a result of changes in the Court's "personnel." Marshall concluded that "[p]ower, not reason, is the new currency of the Court's decision-making."[15] Notwithstanding their victories, however, far right conservatives clearly were not satisfied.

The Justices That Got Away: Souter and Kennedy

Despite the efforts of right-wing activists, implementation of the conservative judicial litmus test was by no means perfect. Even though they had the backing of conservative groups at the time of their nominations, Justices David Souter and Anthony Kennedy have exhibited much more moderate tendencies than anticipated. It is precisely these Justices' more moderate positions that have raised the ire of the far right.

Following on the heels of the rejection of the highly controversial Robert Bork and the subsequent withdrawal of nominee Douglas Ginsburg, the Reagan administration opted for the less controversial Anthony Kennedy in 1987. Despite this clear attempt to avoid the furor surrounding the two previous nominees, Justice Kennedy's nomination still had strong conservative backing. Richard Willard, a "strong conservative" who served as an assistant attorney general under Reagan Attorney General Edwin Meese, "lobbied strenuously" for Kennedy's nomination, and Grover Joseph Rees, a former Reagan judge picker, "predicted confidently that Kennedy would not disappoint conservatives on prayer, abortion, and other social and moral issues."[16] But in the 1990s, both Kennedy and Bush appointee David Souter refused to join efforts led by Justice Scalia and Chief Justice Rehnquist that could have overruled Roe v. Wade, as well as key precedents in such areas as church-state separation, and joined with or wrote opinions in cases overturning a Colorado anti-gay initiative and single-sex education at VMI. As a result, the right wing now calls Justice Kennedy "Reagan's Biggest Disappointment" and accuses him of having "gone with the flow of elite liberal opinion."[17]

Writing about Justice Souter, Gary Bauer, head of the right-wing activist Family Research Council, stated that "you may remember that some of these nominees were stealth nominees . . . The idea was that they were secretly much more conservative than anybody thought but they were being nominated so they could get through the Senate more easily. It ends up they were stealth nominees but the stealth was in the other direction."[18]

The failure of Justices Kennedy and Souter to live up to conservative expectations has clearly disappointed and outraged right-wing activists. At the same time, activists have lavished praise on justices like Clarence Thomas and Antonin Scalia, whose predicted right-wing views have been right on the mark. Even before this year's Presidential campaign began, these activists have demanded an even stricter ideological litmus test for federal judicial appointments.

Writing primarily in publications and direct mail addressed to their allies and believers, particularly as the 1996 election has approached, the right wing has been calling for the implementation of an ideological litmus test that would be even more severe than under Presidents Reagan and Bush. For instance, after lambasting Justice Kennedy's decisions on separation of church and state, reproductive freedom, and civil rights, one conservative publication advised that "[t]here is a crucial lesson in this for conservatives--and for Bob Dole should he become President: It is not enough for a potential judicial nominee to have a record on key issues that accords with the proper role of the courts. The potential nominee must also give some evidence of having the courage of his or her convictions--ideally, a record of sustained consistency."[19]

A more specific blueprint for a new right-wing litmus test was spelled out in 1995 in the Heritage Foundation magazine Policy Review, written by a former Reagan-Bush Justice Department official in one of the offices with major responsibility for judicial nominations during the 1980s. Impelled by the "prospects in 1996 for a new president inclined to appoint conservative justices," the article set out criteria and guidelines to help ensure that future nominees be "in the mold of [Justice] Thomas rather than [Justice] Souter."[20] Future nominees "should show an established commitment to the conservative legal movement," evidenced by active participation in and "associations" with the conservative legal movement and "contribution to conservative legal thought" as in the case of Clarence Thomas.[21] A nominee "should have been tested in Washington at some point in his career," as Thomas had been tested and "challenged by the liberal legal establishment."[22] Based on such reliable indicators of commitment to conservatism, individuals could be nominated who would be "committed to seeking the original meaning of the Constitution"[23] and would join "the pantheon of truly great Supreme Court justices," including Justices Scalia and Thomas.[24]

As right-wing columnist and activist Don Feder more bluntly put it in a pointed "[m]emo to the next Republican president," be "damned sure you're putting a Scalia clone on the bench, and not another Kennedy."[25]

The FRC's Gary Bauer has related the judicial litmus test issue directly to the subject closest to the hearts of religious right activists in the Republican party this summer: the party's platform plank on abortion. In a letter to supporters last December, Bauer turned to history in defending against anticipated efforts to water down the anti-abortion plank. He noted specifically that beginning in 1980, the platform called for "the appointment of judges at all levels who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of human life," and that this "language has been part of the Republican platform ever since." Bauer exhorted his supporters to help retain the platform language because it will "help ensure that the next Republican President will appoint pro-life judges."[26] Interestingly, while tolerance clauses and other possible changes have been discussed as genuine possibilities by Senator Dole and others in the party, neither Dole nor any other official has even hinted at any change in the provisions concerning appointment of judges.[27]

Bauer's ambitions for the new far right litmus test go even further, however. As he told a radio audience this May, the "pro-family movement needs to become so strong that whoever is President, they will get the clear strong unambiguous message that they better put more traditional judges on the Court or they're going to face a major battle with us in any confirmation proceedings."[28] In fact, right-wing activists have already had a serious effect on judicial nominations during the Clinton Administration, and presidential candidate Dole so far appears to be following their wishes on judicial selection.

The Far Right Flexes its Muscles and Influence

Conservative activists have already begun to fulfill Bauer's prescription, particularly after Republicans took control of the Senate in 1994. Reports indicate that a number of candidates for Clinton judgeship nominations were dropped by the Administration itself because of conservative ideological objections, such as a state judge who had committed the unpardonable right-wing sin of awarding child custody to a male partner in one case. A Clinton Justice Department official has admitted that the Administration "steered clear of a few people who might have been fabulous judges, but who would have provoked a fight that we were likely to lose."[29]

The influence of far right activists' views on Senator Dole so far has been even more pronounced. Although Dole claimed in April that he would not employ a litmus test, and observers have noted that judges he recommended to Presidents Reagan and Bush were relatively moderate, his specific actions and campaign pronouncements clearly signal a willingness to comply with far right demands in this area. "When I am president," Dole proclaimed in May, "only conservative judges need apply."[30] Dole identified Chief Justice Rehnquist, who is in many ways the leader of the Court's right wing, as his own judicial "ideal."[31] He has pledged to fulfill the far right's often-expressed crusade[32] to eliminate the role of the American Bar Association in reviewing the qualifications of judicial nominees.[33] Almost a year before his ASNE speech, Dole signed a fund-raising letter for the most active right-wing group on judicial nominations -- the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the right-wing Free Congress Foundation -- endorsing JSMP and attacking many of the very same judges he criticized in his speech and others as "handpicked liberal activists" seeking to "subvert the will of the voters."[34] And Dole's rhetoric in discussing how he would appoint judges -- which refers to the need for judges who are "faithful to the text of the Constitution" and to conduct a "thorough screening" of candidates' "associations and past decision-making"[35] -- echoes the advice of last year's Heritage article on avoiding nominees like Justice Souter.

In fact, during the same Larry King interview in July in which he announced that a pro-choice Republican would deliver the convention keynote speech, Dole reassured the far right on judges. Notwithstanding his earlier disavowal of litmus tests, Dole proclaimed that he would have "litmus tests for all judges" to ensure that they are "tough on crime" and "interpret the Constitution, not try to amend it." Asked specifically about whether his judicial nominees would have to be anti-abortion, Dole stated, "that's going to be probably part of our platform -- they want us to consider that, it ought to be a consideration."[36]

If actions speak louder than words in this area, moreover, Dole's actions speak loudly indeed. During the first six months of 1996, including all of Dole's time as majority leader, not a single Clinton judicial nominee was approved by the Senate.[37] As Attorney General Reno pointed out, this not only delayed court cases and hurt the administration of justice across the country, but was also completely different than the situation in past election years such as 1992, when 66 Republican-nominated judges were confirmed by a Democratic-controlled Senate. In the weeks before Senator Dole resigned as majority leader, rumors suggested that he might be willing to break the logjam. Groups like JSMP howled in protest[38]. The result: not a single confirmation until July, when minority leader Tom Daschle negotiated a partial confirmation resumption with Dole's successor Trent Lott, after Dole left the Senate.[39] Lott has been criticized harshly for that compromise by Tom Jipping of the JSMP, who declared that "Mr. Lott and Mr. Hatch make Mr. Dole look positively principled."[40]

The most recent example of far right influence in this area is found in the draft Republican Party platform, released on August 5. The draft platform includes the traditional litmus test language supported by activists like Gary Bauer, as well as a repeat of Dole's pledge that upon his election, "only conservative judges need apply."[41] But the draft platform goes even further. It specifically incorporates the radical proposals of Pat Buchanan and others that the federal courts should be stripped of jurisdiction over selected subjects and that the Constitution should be amended to eliminate life tenure for federal judges and require their "periodic reconfirmation."[42] These platform provisions would seriously undermine the fundamental principle of judicial independence, which Chief Justice Rehnquist himself has characterized as "one of the crown jewels of our system of government"[43] which should not be changed by threatening judges with removal because of their rulings.

Not surprisingly, religious right and other activists have rewarded Dole's fealty on this issue by implicitly (if not explicitly) endorsing him and opposing Clinton, and urging their followers to do the same, for the sake of the courts. For example, in June, Christian Coalition founder Pat Robertson exhorted "Christian voters" to become involved in the presidential election in order to get "conservative Supreme Court judges put on the Court, which could indeed reverse Roe v. Wade" as well as decisions on school prayer and other subjects.[44] An article by the Institute for Justice's Clint Bolick warned that "if Clinton wins again, one appointment could topple [the] highest court's conservative tilt."[45] Jipping told his TV audience that "President Reagan gave us Justice Antonin Scalia and President Bush gave us Justice Clarence Thomas", but "President Clinton will never give us anything that comes close."[46]

Right-wing activists are clearly correct in at least one respect: the stakes are high indeed. Numerous vacancies are expected on the federal courts over the next several years, including on the Supreme Court.

Imposition of a new far right judicial litmus test, no matter who is President, risks serious damage to the rights and the safety of all Americans.

Dangers of the New Far Right Judicial Litmus Test

Right-wing activists, echoed by Senator Dole and other conservative political leaders, claim that their recipe for judicial selection is necessary to reverse the harm to crime control efforts allegedly caused by President Clinton's judicial nominations. In fact, the real danger comes from the critics themselves. Not only do the facts belie their attacks, but the record shows that in the area of crime control, as well as with respect to such areas as religious freedom, reproductive choice, and civil rights, the new far right judicial litmus test threatens all Americans.

CRIME AND GUN CONTROL

A central theme of recent attacks on federal judges nominated by President Clinton, both by far right advocacy groups and by Senator Dole and other Republican spokesmen, has been the charge that they are "soft on crime" compared with Reagan-Bush judges. In fact, almost precisely the opposite is true. The record of court decisions demonstrates that the "soft on crime" charge is fallacious. In addition, Reagan-Bush appointees to the Supreme Court and the lower courts have seriously hurt efforts to combat crime and gun-related violence by striking down important federal anti-crime laws. Imposition of a new far right judicial litmus test threatens to make the problem even worse in the future.

The Far Right "Crime Control" Attack on Clinton Judges

In his speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors on April 19, 1996, Senator Dole spelled out in detail his attack on President Clinton's judicial nominees as allegedly soft on crime. Describing Americans' confidence in their courts and trust in the rule of law as perhaps the most important issue of the presidential campaign, Dole identified a number of Clinton's appointees, including New York Judge Harold Baer, Virginia Judge Leonie Brinkema, Third Circuit Judge H. Lee Sarokin, and Eleventh Circuit Judge Rosemary Barkett, as forming a judicial "Hall of Shame" characterized by a willingness "to use technicalities to overturn death sentences for brutal murderers" and by an "outright hostility to law enforcement."[47] Senator Dole's assault has been followed by similar accusations by other conservative political figures, including no less than three floor speeches by Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch.

As discussed previously, these political attacks were, at the very least, clearly inspired by similar attacks from far right advocacy groups. For example, the fund-raising letter signed by Dole almost a year before his 1996 speech for the Judicial Selection Monitoring Project of the far right Free Congress Foundation specifically criticized Judges Barkett and Sarokin as well as other Clinton "activist judges," attacking their "liberal bias" on issues like "crime prevention."[48] The same letter contained strong endorsements of JSMP by both Senator Dole and Senator Hatch.

These attacks generally follow a common pattern. They begin with a gruesome description of the facts in individual criminal cases, leaving no room for doubt as to the guilt of the criminal defendants. They then proceed to describe in extremely derogatory terms how Clinton-appointed judges have either reversed defendants' convictions or reduced their sentences. On the basis of a very small number of such anecdotal cases, it is concluded that Clinton's judicial appointees are liberal activists who regularly set free murderers, drug dealers, and other criminals, in contrast to Republican-appointed judges.

The facts, however, belie these attacks on Clinton's judicial nominees. The attacks are contradicted by the voting record of Senator Dole and his colleagues. The entire Senate, including Senators Dole and Hatch, has approved unanimously 182 of Clinton's 185 appointments to the federal Courts of Appeals and District Courts. Included in the group of unanimously approved appointees are Judges Baer and Brinkema, both of whom Dole personally singled out for criticism, and North Carolina Judge James Beaty, whom Orrin Hatch and a number of far right advocacy groups have criticized.[49] Indeed, Republican Senator Jesse Helms "lavishly praised" Judge Beaty during his nomination as "the kind of judge who applies the law as it is written and rules on the facts as they are presented."[50] As for Judge Barkett, another member of Dole's judicial "Hall of Shame" and a frequent target for extremist conservatives, six of the seven criminal opinions for which she has been criticized during her tenure on the Eleventh Circuit were unanimous decisions, with one or more Reagan-Bush appointees joining Barkett in all but one of those cases.[51] Furthermore, as a member of the Florida Supreme Court, Barkett voted to affirm the death penalty in over 200 cases, and she voted to uphold a state contraband forfeiture law for drug traffickers which a lower court had declared unconstitutional.[52] Judge Barkett received praise and support at her nomination hearing from conservative Senator Connie Mack.[53] Even Judge Sarokin, whose recent resignation was cited as a triumph by the Dole campaign,[54] received the approval of a number of conservative senators, such as Senator Alan Simpson.[55]

This discrepancy between rhetoric and reality highlights an even deeper methodological flaw in conservative attacks on the Clinton judiciary: the anecdotal approach of choosing a few criminal law cases with grisly facts and criticizing a judge who reversed a conviction or a death sentence due to legal error by police or prosecutors. Using that approach, any President in the history of the United States could be characterized as soft on crime, and even the most hard-line judge could end up in a judicial "Hall of Shame." Consider the following cases:

- In Quartararo v. Fogg and Quartararo v. Mantello, two brothers were convicted of the brutal murder of a thirteen year old boy. The victim caught the brothers and two other men stealing a bicycle. They proceeded to stomp the child to death and stifle his screams by pushing stones down his throat. Even though all four men were convicted in state court, and all their appeals were rejected, the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York granted habeas corpus and freed them on $3,000 bail on the basis of so-called "troubling inconsistencies" in the story told by law enforcement officials. Were these decisions issued by "liberal" Clinton appointees? No; the decision in both cases was written by Judge Richard Korman, a Reagan appointee.[56]
- In Joubert v. Hopkins, the death sentence of a three-time confessed child murderer was overturned. One of the victims was bound, gagged, and placed in the trunk of the defendant's car. He was later removed from the trunk, stripped to his underwear and pinned to the ground with a knife when he tried to roll away. The boy was then slashed and stabbed to death even as he begged for his life. Another of the victims suffered a similar fate, and his corpse was found with a drawing of a plant cut into the torso. The defendant confessed to both of these murders, as well as a third.

He also said that he would kill again if he were ever set free. Nevertheless, the U.S. District Court for the District of Nebraska vacated the defendant's death sentence based on the legal technicality that the phrase "exceptional depravity" as used in the death penalty statute was too vague. This decision was issued by Judge William Cambridge, a Reagan appointee.[57] Judge Cambridge was reversed and the death sentence was reinstated on appeal. The deciding vote to do so was cast by Eighth Circuit Judge Diane Murphy, a Clinton appointee.[58]

- In Reeves v. Hopkins, a double murderer's death sentence was overturned. The defendant in this case was convicted of stabbing to death his cousin and her houseguest while he was trying to rape them. Even though the Nebraska Supreme Court twice rejected appeals in this case, the U.S. District Court for the District of Nebraska granted a petition for habeas corpus on the basis of a conclusion that the Nebraska Supreme Court had improperly weighed the aggravating and mitigating circumstances involved in the case. Judge Richard Kopf, a Bush appointee, wrote the decision.[59]
- In United States v. Chen, the defendants were being prosecuted for crimes related to the seizure of 1,000 pounds of heroin, the largest heroin bust of all time. The trial court judge suppressed key pieces of evidence and released two defendants on bail. Was this another example of Clinton's Judge Harold Baer at work? No; the trial judge was Vaughn Walker, nominated by President Bush.[60]
- In Hitchcock v. Dugger, an appellate judge wrote an opinion reversing the death sentence of a Florida man convicted of strangling his 13-year-old niece. The slayer had confessed that he killed the girl to prevent her from telling her parents that the defendant had statutorily raped her. Although the jury sentenced him to death and the judge agreed, the sentence was reversed because the appellate court found that several excuses offered by the killer were not satisfactorily considered, including even the claim that the murderer was allegedly a fond and affectionate uncle. Was this another case where Judge Barkett overruled a Florida death sentence? No; it was a decision reversing the Florida Supreme Court by Reagan-appointed Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, joined by Reagan appointees Sandra Day O'Connor and Chief Justice Rehnquist.[61]

What lessons can be derived from these examples? Should Judges Korman, Cambridge, Kopf, and Walker, as well as Justices Scalia, O'Connor, and Rehnquist, all be inducted into Dole's judicial "Hall of Shame?" Of course not. The true lesson of these examples is that individual cases cast in a negative light provide absolutely no legitimate basis from which to draw general conclusions about a judge's record. Any conscientious judge, regardless of which President appointed him or her, will eventually be confronted with a situation where the law requires that evidence be thrown out or a death sentence be overturned. Picking out a minute sample of such cases which happen to have fallen to Clinton appointees cannot provide an effective basis to measure their record. As Sentor Patrick Leahy explained, "no one should be making such statements or demagoging judges based on isolated decisions. We disserve our system of justice, our system of government, and the American people when we engage in such rhetoric."[62]

Instead of focusing on a handful of sensationalist-sounding cases, academic observers have utilized broader measuring tools and concluded that Clinton's judicial appointees have been middle-of-the-road, not liberal or "soft on crime." University of Houston political science professor Robert Carp and his colleagues have cataloged 36,500 judicial decisions since the Nixon administration. On the basis of this comprehensive study, Carp has described as "a bunch of nonsense" Dole's characterization of the Clinton judiciary.[63] Professor Donald R. Songer, one of Carp's co-authors, has characterized Clinton's judicial appointees as "decidedly less liberal than [those of] other modern Democratic presidents" and as most resembling the appointees of President Ford.[64] Along the spectrum of judicial decisions, Clinton judges have issued liberal decisions in criminal cases 33% of the time, about the same as Ford appointees (32%) and Nixon appointees (30%), and well below Carter appointees (38%).[65] Additionally, forty percent of Clinton nominees in 1995 were former prosecutors, and 62% were deemed well qualified by the American Bar Association, compared to 52% in the Bush administration.[66] These statistics demonstrate clearly the fallacy of the "soft on crime" charges by conservative critics of Clinton's nominees. Indeed, as the Washington Post has observed, most pre-election year complaints about Clinton's judges have come from liberals, including an appellate court judge appointed by President Carter, who believe that the President's nominees have been too moderate in light of the conservative Reagan-Bush judges who preceded them.[67]

Federal Crime Control Laws and the Reagan-Bush Courts

Although a review of the facts concerning individual criminal cases thus shows little basis for "soft on crime" attacks on Clinton judges, the record does reveal a little-known fact about Reagan-Bush judges and crime control. A significant part of the ideological framework of jurists like Scalia, Thomas, and Rehnquist is their extremely narrow view of federal authority.[68] In the area of crime control, that ideology threatens to significantly impair national anti-crime efforts. Perhaps the clearest example is the 1995 case of United States v. Lopez.[69] In Lopez, the Supreme Court dramatically transformed the interpretation of the Constitution's Commerce Clause by striking down as unconstitutional the Gun Free School Zones Act of 1990, which forbade "any individual knowingly to possess a firearm at a place that [he or she] knows . . . is a school zone."[70] The 5-4 decision in the case was written by Chief Justice Rehnquist, with all four of the other justices in the majority appointed by either President Reagan or President Bush. Lopez represents an extreme departure from decades of Supreme Court precedent, and poses a substantial threat to past and future anti-crime initiatives.

The Supreme Court has recognized for decades that Congress has the power "to regulate those activities having a substantial relation to interstate commerce. . . i.e. those activities that substantially affect interstate commerce."[71] In a series of decisions prior to Lopez, the Court found this power sufficiently broad to authorize a number of laws with far less connection to interstate commerce than the Gun Free School Zones Act, including a federal statute making it a crime to engage in local loan sharking, a federal statute prohibiting racial discrimination at local restaurants, and the application of a federal agricultural statute to prohibit the growth and consumption of wheat locally on one's own land.[72] In finding the Gun Free School Zones Act unconstitutional, the Reagan-Bush majority chose to fly in the face of established law in order to establish a regime more in line with their conservative views. By choosing the conservative activist path, the Lopez Court has not only overruled one specific law aimed at combating violence in our nation's schools, but it has also called into question the validity of more than 100 sections of the United States Code, including at least 25 criminal statutes whose validity had previously seemed well settled.[73] As Justice

Breyer explained in dissent, the endangered statutes include federal laws prohibiting arson of buildings used in activity affecting interstate commerce and forbidding possession of machine guns.[74]

Even though Lopez was issued only last year, it has already severely harmed anti-crime efforts. As a direct result of Chief Justice Rehnquist's decision in Lopez:

- Two appellate courts have ruled the federal arson law unconstitutional as applied to intentional burning of homes or other residences, reversing the conviction of one arsonist who maliciously burned down his neighbors' home and freeing another arsonist who conspired in the burning down of her own home to collect over $4 million in fraudulent insurance claims.[75]
- The Child Support Recovery Act, which calls for criminal penalties for deadbeat parents who willfully fail to pay past due child support for children residing in other states, has been declared unconstitutional by a number of federal courts.[76]
- One court has specifically suggested that the federal law banning machine gun possession may be invalid under Lopez.[77]
- Another court has stated that Lopez may make unconstitutional the dual sovereignty doctrine, under which Rodney King's assailants were successfully prosecuted for federal criminal civil rights violations even though they were acquitted under state law.[78]

A recent ruling by Reagan-appointed Judge Jackson Kiser of the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Virginia in July provides a chilling omen of things to come under a far right judicial litmus test. In Brzonkala v. Virginia Polytechnic and State University[79] Judge Kiser seized on the Supreme Court's holding in Lopez to declare unconstitutional the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which gives female victims of gender-motivated violent crime a federal cause of action against their attackers.[80] Though technically a civil statute, VAWA "is criminal in nature . . . [It] was designed to address problems in the state criminal justice system, and, in attempting to supplement deficiencies in the state criminal system, it creates a civil cause of action that seeks to vindicate a criminal act."[81] In Brzonkala, the plaintiff was raped by two adult male members of Virginia Polytechnic Institute's (VPI) football team. Despite twice audibly saying "no" to requests for sexual intercourse, she was pinned to her bed by her elbows and legs and forced to submit to vaginal intercourse three times. Even though one of the attackers confessed to the sexual contact and that he had been told "no" twice, neither attacker was ever prosecuted by the state. One was found guilty of sexual assault by the school's judicial committee and suspended from school for two semesters; this penalty was later set aside when the charge was reduced to "using abusive language," and the attacker was allowed to return to VPI without notice to the plaintiff. The net result was that the plaintiff, out of fear for her own safety, was forced to cancel her plans to return to VPI for the fall semester.[82] Notwithstanding these facts, Judge Kiser dismissed the plaintiff's VAWA claim on the grounds that VAWA exceeded Congress' authority under the Commerce Clause. Disregarding Congressional findings that "[g]ender-based crimes and fear of gender-based crimes restricts movement, reduces employment opportunities, increases health expenditures, and reduces consumer spending, all of which affect interstate commerce and the national economy" and that "studies report that almost 50 percent of rape victims lose their jobs or are forced to quit in the aftermath of the crime,"[83] Judge Kiser relied on Lopez to declare VAWA unconstitutional.[84] Judge Kiser is the same lower court judge who found constitutional the Virginia Military Institute's exclusion of female cadets, only to be reversed five years later by the Supreme Court.[85] The ultimate result in Brzonkala is unclear.

As these examples suggest, the conservative judicial activism that led to Lopez may well produce further harm to important federal anti-crime efforts, particularly if far right advocates are successful in imposing their version of the right-wing judicial litmus test on future nominations.

Gun Control: The Brady Bill

A similar problem is posed with respect to gun control efforts. In 1993, Congress enacted the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act as an amendment to the Gun Control Act of 1968. The Brady Act requires the Department of Justice within five years to establish and maintain an instant national criminal background check system for handgun purchasers. In the interim, the Brady Act imposes a waiting period of up to five days, and requires the chief law enforcement officer of the prospective purchaser's place of residence to perform a reasonable background check during that waiting period. According to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 44,274 felons have been prevented from illegally obtaining handguns under this procedure.[86] Despite such reports of the Brady Act's significant success in keeping handguns out of the possession of convicted felons, it has regularly drawn criticism from extremist conservatives who label it a violation of handgun owners' rights.[87]

Across the country, federal judges appointed by Presidents Reagan and Bush repeatedly have voted to invalidate the Brady Act on constitutional grounds. In Printz v. U.S., Reagan-appointed Judge Charles Lovell struck down the Brady Act on Tenth Amendment grounds, finding it to have "substantially commandeered state executive officers and indirectly commandeered the legislative processes of the states to administer a federal program."[88] In Mack v. U.S., Bush-appointed Judge John Roll struck down the Brady Act on similar Tenth Amendment grounds, as well as Fifth Amendment Due Process grounds because of the Brady Act's allegedly "imprecise and indefinite" statutory duty.[89] These two decisions were reversed in Mack v. U.S., with Bush-appointed Circuit Judge Ferdinand Fernandez dissenting.[90] The majority looked to established law and observed that "[t]he obligation imposed on state officers by the Brady Act is no more remarkable than, say, the federally-imposed duties of state officers to report missing children . . . or traffic fatalities."[91] Such reasoning, however, did not prevent Bush-appointed Judges Charles Pickering and Rebecca Doherty individually from striking down the Brady Act on Tenth Amendment grounds in McGee v. U.S.[92] and Romero v. U.S.[93] In Frank v. U.S. Bush-appointed Judge Fred Parker also found the Brady Act unconstitutional on Tenth Amendment grounds.[94] Like Judges Lovell and Roll, but unlike Judges Pickering and Doherty, Judge Parker was reversed on appeal. A unanimous Second Circuit held that the Brady Act imposes neither "a structural burden inconsistent with the plan established by the Constitution," nor "an onerous quantitative burden on state or local officials."[95]

As of this summer, two federal courts of appeals have thus sustained the validity of the Brady Act, but one appellate court has ruled that the law is unconstitutional in an opinion by Reagan appointee E. Grady Jolly.[96] The Supreme Court has decided to consider the issue in 1996-97, and will review the Ninth Circuit decision upholding the law in Mack v. U.S. At stake in this decision will be not only the Brady Act itself, but also the broader question of whether any such federal anti-crime and anti-gun violence laws can stand. Although it is unclear whether conservative judicial activists will prevail in Mack as in Lopez, there is no question that Reagan-Bush judges have already damaged federal crime control efforts and that imposition of a far right judicial litmus test threatens to cause even more harm in the future.

FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Religious freedom has long been a fundamental American value. The protections for religion embodied in the Establishment and Free Exercise Clauses of the Constitution, as interpreted by the Supreme Court over the years, have preserved and fostered a breadth and depth of religious expression and practice unrivaled in the modern world.[97]

But despite lip service to the principles of religious freedom, Reagan-Bush judges have in fact harmed religious freedom over the past fifteen years and threaten to do more harm in the future. Several years ago, the Supreme Court decided that government could pass laws which substantially interfere with an individual's ability to worship as he or she sees fit. It also, for the first time, allowed and in one case required direct government funding of religious activities, blurring the separation of church and state. And the more conservative members of the Court have expressly advocated a weak reading of the Establishment Clause that would permit a wide range of government-sponsored religious activities and allow religious majorities to use government to advance their religion at the expense of religious minorities and non-believers. The addition of several Justices to the Court based on a far right judicial litmus test could seriously threaten constitutional protection for freedom of religion.

Free Exercise of Religion

The Free Exercise Clause of the First Amendment was designed to protect individuals against government activity that interferes with their ability to practice their religion. In the 1963 case of Sherbert v. Verner,[98] the Supreme Court ruled that a state law could not burden the free exercise of religion unless the law was narrowly tailored to achieve a compelling government interest. This rule subjected even laws of general application to the most exacting level of judicial scrutiny if the law burdened a free exercise right. For example, a local law prohibiting all consumption of alcoholic beverages would have to exempt the use of wine for religious ceremonies such as communion, unless the government could demonstrate a compelling justification for an absolute ban.

But the Supreme Court reversed course and dealt a severe blow to religious liberty in 1990 with Employment Division v. Smith.[99] In an opinion authored by Justice Scalia, a 5-4 majority of the Court ruled that the Free Exercise Clause does not prevent government from enforcing generally applicable criminal laws even when such enforcement effectively prevents individuals from practicing their religious beliefs or holding religious ceremonies. This new standard not only departed from the Court's settled First Amendment doctrine, but also, as Justice O'Connor pointed out, was an example of judicial activism because the Court could have reached the same result without declaring a new constitutional rule.[100]

The new constitutional rule announced in Smith left people of all faiths vulnerable to restrictive laws. For instance, courts have relied on Smith in authorizing government agencies to:

- Force families of accident victims and others to endure intrusive government autopsies of family members, even though the autopsies were directly contrary to their religious beliefs and there was no finding that the autopsies were necessary for government purposes;[101]
- Dismiss the challenges of Catholic and Quaker groups to employer sanction provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act that they contended interfered with the operation of their religious facilities;[102]
- Enforce boarding house rules that violated the religious practices of the Salvation Army;[103]
- Require a religious student at a state veterinary school to perform fatal surgical operations on healthy animals, without even considering the student's religious objections.[104]

Disturbed by the result in Smith, Congress effectively reinstated the law as it existed prior to Smith by passing the Religious Freedom Restoration Act ("RFRA"), creating a statutory right to religious freedom equivalent to the constitutional protection that existed before Smith.[105] But even this legislation may not be sufficient to safeguard religious freedom. Federal judges have disagreed on RFRA's constitutionality.[106] Parties in one case have recently asked the Supreme Court to determine whether RFRA is constitutional.[107] Since four of the five Justices from the Smith majority are still on the Court, any Supreme Court challenge to RFRA in the near future would likely be heard by these same Justices, along with one of the current Court's most conservative Justices, Clarence Thomas. Indeed, some right-wing commentators who have praised Justices Thomas and Scalia have criticized RFRA,[108] suggesting possible danger to this statutory protection for religious freedom, particularly if a new right-wing judicial litmus test is used in selecting future Justices.

Establishment Clause

A. Vouchers and Government Funding of Religion

From the time of the Framers of the Constitution, prohibition of government funding of religion has been at the heart of our nation's concept of religious liberty. James Madison vehemently opposed a tax assessment bill in Virginia which would have collected public funds for religious purposes. He wrote: "Who does not see that . . . the same authority which can force a citizen to contribute three pence only of his property for the support of any one establishment, may force him to conform to any other establishment in all cases whatsoever?"[109] After the defeat of the bill, Thomas Jefferson wrote the Virginia Bill for Establishing Religious Freedom. The bill's preamble declared that "to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves, is sinful and tyrannical," and its text provided "[t]hat no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever."[110]

Supreme Court precedent has followed the lead of Madison and Jefferson by interpreting the Establishment Clause as prohibiting government funding of religion. When religious organizations received government funding as a part of a more general funding program, the Supreme Court traditionally examined whether the organization's religious activities could be separated from its secular activities, and whether the program ensured that the government funds would flow only to the secular ones.[111] For instance, in Committee for Public Education v. Nyquist, the Court struck down a state tax credit for parents who sent their children to private schools; since many of these schools would have been sectarian, the program would have impermissibly used public funds for sectarian as well as secular purposes.[112] By requiring that government funds be used only for secular activities, the Court safeguarded religious liberty by protecting religion from government fiscal influence and protecting taxpayers from mandatory funding of religious beliefs and practices.

But this basic principle of church-state separation has been thrown into doubt by two recent religious funding cases where the conservative members of the Supreme Court allowed government funding of religious activities. Both of these cases were decided by 5-4 votes. These decisions could have grave implications for more widespread government funding of religion, including government-funded school voucher programs that would appropriate public funds for sectarian education and which are opposed by most Americans.[113]

In Zobrest v. Catalina Foothills School District,[114] parents enrolled their deaf child in a religious high school and claimed that federal law required the State of Arizona to provide a sign-language interpreter for the child. The State refused on the ground that providing a government employee to promote religious instruction would violate the Establishment Clause. The Court's conservative majority of Chief Justice Rehnquist, Justice White, and Reagan-Bush appointees Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas rejected this argument and held that the Establishment Clause did not bar a State from providing an interpreter to advance the child's sectarian education.[115] The Court relied in part on the theory that filtering of government funds through "private choices" of individual parents negated the government's role in supporting religious schools, despite the fact that such "choice" is made possible only through public financial assistance provided by the government and so is not truly private. Such reliance on "private choice"[116] could open the floodgates to massive government funding of religion so long as the funds are first funneled through individual citizens.

Zobrest has already had an important effect with respect to church-state separation. In Walker v. San Francisco Unified School District,[117] the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals relied on Zobrest as well as other Supreme Court cases in allowing the use of federal funds to provide certain materials and equipment to parochial schools--in spite of the court's recognition that prior Supreme Court precedent squarely prohibited such uses of government funds.[118] According to the Walker court, Zobrest implied that the Supreme Court's prior prohibition on such funding had been implicitly overruled, even though the Court had not yet done so itself.[119]

In Rosenberger v. Rector and Visitors of the University of Virginia,[120] the conservative bloc of the Court in another 5-4 decision again eroded the wall of separation between church and state by actually requiring government funding of a student religious publication. Although the University of Virginia reimbursed expenditures by some student groups through a Student Activities Fund, it refused to reimburse the expenses of a student newspaper dedicated to discussing and promoting Christian perspectives and beliefs on the ground that such funding would violate the Establishment Clause. Chief Justice Rehnquist and Reagan-Bush appointees Kennedy, O'Connor, Scalia, and Thomas struck down the school's refusal to fund religious student publications as unconstitutional. While the Court focused on free speech concerns, the Court's decision may not only allow but require government funding of religion in some circumstances. The potential consequences of Rosenberger were recognized by Justice Souter in dissent, who stated that the Court's reasoning "would commit the Court to approving direct religious aid beyond anything justifiable for the sake of access to speaking forums."[121]

Chief Justice Rehnquist, Justice Scalia, and Justice Thomas have already made clear that they would allow virtually any government funding of religious activities, regardless of the potentially substantial benefits received by religious groups, so long as the grants are made without explicit reference to religion. Justice Kennedy's decision to join the majority in Zobrest and his authorship of the opinion in Rosenberger cast considerable doubt on his willingness to protect the independence of religion and the consciences of taxpayers by prohibiting government funding of religious activities. Justice O'Connor's emphasis on a case-by-case analysis[122] makes it difficult to evaluate what her position would be concerning a voucher program including sectarian schools, but voucher advocates clearly hope to win her vote based on her concurring opinion in Rosenberger.

Consequently, there are at least three votes on the Court, and possibly four or five, that would support a voucher program including sectarian schools. Several voucher cases are already winding their way through the judicial system, including an Ohio case in which a lower court judge has approved a voucher plan, and may very well be heard by the Supreme Court in the near future. Imposing a new right-wing litmus test for judicial appointments would almost certainly lock in a Supreme Court majority that would authorize vouchers and other significant government funding of religion, dismantling the historic separation of church and state and eroding religious liberty.

B. Weakening the Establishment Clause: The Coercion Test

For the past generation, federal courts have required government neutrality in religious matters by applying a three-part test enunciated in the 1971 Supreme Court decision of Lemon v. Kurtzman, written by Chief Justice Burger.[124] Under the Lemon test, government violates religious freedom and neutrality when its action has a primarily religious reason, has the primary effect of advancing or inhibiting religion, or results in excessive government entanglement with religion.[125] Although Lemon itself has been applied inconsistently by the Supreme Court and criticized by a number of Justices and commentators, a majority of Justices have continued to rely on key principles underlying the decision, such as the principle that government should not endorse religion.[126]

If the conservative wing of the Court had its way, however, such principles would be disregarded entirely and replaced by a much more permissive "coercion" test which would allow government involvement in and promotion of all but the most invasive religious activities. In Lee v. Weisman, Justice Scalia wrote for four dissenters (three of whom remain on the Court) that the Establishment Clause should not apply whatsoever to state promotion of religion unless the state threatens to impose a penalty on nonparticipants. Under this view, the Constitution would permit a wide range of government-sponsored religious activities. In the public schools, officials could require that the school day begin with sectarian devotionals, teachers could proselytize to their students, and student religious majorities could determine what religious service or which religious leader to have at school events regardless of the beliefs of religious minorities, so long as objecting students faced no formal punishment. In other contexts, a coercion test would allow government-erected symbols of a single faith to the exclusion of others on public buildings and in public space, and judges, military officers, and government employers could proselytize to those under their supervision.

The support for such an interpretation of the Establishment Clause by three present members of the Court raises serious concerns about the future of religious liberty in America. If right-wing groups are successful in establishing their litmus test for judicial appointments, this coercion test could command a majority on the Court, allowing public officials and whoever can effectively pressure those pubic officials to use the machinery of government to advance their beliefs at the expense of those with other beliefs. In a nation with such a variety of religious beliefs and practices, where shifting populations can cause today's religious majority to become tomorrow's religious minority, it is more important than ever for our federal judges to ensure that our basic religious freedoms do not become subject to the popular whims of the moment. This protection for religious liberty would clearly be endangered by a new right-wing judicial litmus test for federal judges.

FREEDOM FROM DISCRIMINATION[128]

The far right's objective of imposing right-wing litmus tests on future judicial appointments poses great danger to Americans' freedom from arbitrary discrimination. Even putting aside the issue of affirmative action, and focusing only on decisions since 1992, in a wide variety of cases the Reagan-Bush federal courts have demonstrated a startling inclination to overturn or otherwise erode long-settled protections of individual liberties.[129] Reagan-Bush appointees to the federal courts have emasculated both statutory and constitutional protection of minority voting power, called into question the very basis for the nation's civil rights laws, and sanctioned significant encroachments on statutory and constitutional protections against discrimination and against arbitrary interference in Americans' private affairs. Just as important, dissenting views in civil rights cases that now command only three or four votes on the Supreme Court offer a chilling forecast of the future damage that could be done by one or two additional appointments to the Court based on a far-right judicial litmus test, which would also threaten civil rights and diversity on the courts themselves.

Voting Rights and Racial Discrimination

Nowhere is the retreat from the Supreme Court's traditional commitment to equality more evident than when considering the voting rights of minority citizens. Since 1992, the Supreme Court has rendered virtually meaningless some of the protections afforded by the Voting Rights Act. In Holder v. Hall,[130] the Supreme Court ruled that the Voting Rights Act could not be used to challenge a single-commissioner form of government. In that case, the Court rejected the complaint of African-American voters of Bleckley County, Georgia, who comprise 22 percent of the county's population, that its single-commissioner form of county government illegally diluted their voting power. Bleckley County's county commissioner, who always has been white, controls all county property, levies taxes, spends public money, builds and repairs roads and bridges and makes the legal rules governing county government operations. The oppressiveness of such a system on the articulation of minority interests has deterred many of the African-American voters in that county from running for office because of their relatively weak voting strength and even from voting because all poll watchers in the county are white. Nonetheless, the five-member Reagan-Bush majority of the Court failed to recognize, much less advance, the statute's primary purpose of augmenting minority representation to remedy past discrimination.

The Court has also systematically invalidated so-called "majority-minority" districts drawn by state legislatures to remedy past discrimination by boosting minority representation. In a series of cases since 1992, the Reagan-Bush appointees on the Supreme Court have imposed the most rigorous standards on these districts and, consequently, left such attempts at increasing minority representation highly vulnerable to constitutional attack. Prior to these decisions, the federal courts intervened in voting district cases only to enforce the one-person-one-vote requirement and to prevent dilution of a minority group's voting strength.[132] The Reagan-Bush majority, though, has added a third category to the list of when federal courts may intervene in these cases: whenever white voters feel disenfranchised by the creation of majority-minority districts, even if they are intended to remedy proven discrimination and even if such voters cannot show a dilution of their voting strength. In Shaw v. Reno,[133] the Court held that if white plaintiffs could show that a voting district scheme was so irrational on its face or so bizarre in geographical contour that it can only be understood as an effort to segregate voters into separate voting districts because of their race, such districts would be invalidated unless it was shown to be narrowly tailored to further a compelling governmental interest. The Court further sharpened that standard, however, in Miller v. Johnson,[134] when it determined that white voters need not show that a voting district is bizarrely shaped, but only that race was the dominant and controlling rationale in drawing voting district lines. Although the Court acknowledged that eradicating the effects of past racial discrimination was a "significant" state interest, the Court rejected the notion that it rose to the level of a "compelling" state interest. On this basis, the Court invalidated the majority-minority voting district at issue.

In its most recent term, the 5-4 Court majority solidified its work in Bush v. Vera[135] and Shaw v. Hunt.[136] In those cases, the majority struck down four congressional districts designed to augment Hispanic and Black representation. The Bush opinion seems to indicate that even when other traditional political and geographical factors influence state officials' district line drawing, the presence of race as a major factor will trigger strict judicial investigation into the plan. In dissent, Justice Stevens aptly stated that "I [do not] see how our constitutional tradition can countenance the suggestion that a State may draw unsightly lines to favor farmers or city dwellers, but not to create districts that benefit the very group whose history inspired the Amendment that the Voting Rights Act was designed to implement."[137] Particularly if a new far-right litmus test is used to select future Supreme Court justices, the protections of the Voting Rights Act are likely to be even further eviscerated.

Similar problems are evident in other recent Supreme Court decisions on racial discrimination. In Purkett v. Elem,[138] the Court eroded the protections afforded by a decade-old precedent which forbids the use of race in peremptory challenge settings. Under Batson v. Kentucky,[139] once the opponent of a peremptory challenge has made out a case of racial discrimination, the proponent of the challenge may counter with a race-neutral explanation for such challenge. In Purkett, the Court undermined Batson's protections by ruling that a race-neutral explanation tendered by a proponent of a peremptory challenge need not be persuasive. Indeed, any race-neutral explanation, no matter how "implausible or fantastic" or "silly or superstitious" is sufficient to rebut a case of racial discrimination![140]

In United States v. Armstrong,[141] Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote for the Supreme Court that African-American criminal defendants who presented evidence that only minorities were being prosecuted on crack charges in federal court were not even entitled to discovery on their claim of selective prosecution unless they could show the existence of similarly situated white criminal defendants who could have been prosecuted but were not. In dissent, Justice Stevens noted that "it is undisputed that the brunt of the elevated federal penalties [for trafficking crack cocaine as opposed to powder cocaine] falls heavily on blacks. While 65% of the persons who have used crack are white, in 1993 they represented only 4% of the federal offenders convicted of trafficking in crack. Eighty-eight percent of such defendants were black."[142] Justice Stevens countered the Rehnquist-led majority in asserting that the stark disparity of such statistics raises an inference of racial discrimination for which the trial judge properly ordered discovery but which the Supreme Court disregarded.

In another area of deep and divisive concern over racial equality, the Supreme Court recently ordered that a federal district judge exceeded his authority in trying to desegregate the Kansas City public schools. In Missouri v. Jenkins,[143] the Court vacated the district court's orders designed to attract, not coerce, white students back into the inner city school district. In writing for the majority, Chief Justice Rehnquist equated the goal of returning local control of the schools to the goal of remedying the effects of past racial segregation in public schools. As the dissent pointed out, the majority's opinion will seriously harm efforts to remedy the vestiges of racial segregation.

Employment Discrimination

The Constitution does not protect against arbitrary discrimination in most private sector employment decisions. Rather, workers unfairly treated because of their religion, race, or gender must resort to statutory remedies adopted by Congress, the states, and localities. However, even though Congress adopted the 1964 Civil Rights Act as a broad remedial measure for such injustices, the Supreme Court has appeared intent on narrowing the Act's protections and forcing workers to meet seemingly insurmountable burdens of proof in support of their claims. Recently, in St. Mary's Honor Center v. Hicks,[144] the Supreme Court, in an opinion written by Justice Antonin Scalia, determined that a fired worker does not automatically win his case even if he proves that his former employer is lying in its defense of a job discrimination claim.

Beyond evidence that the former employer's excuse for the firing is merely a ruse, a worker alleging arbitrary discrimination now needs direct evidence of impermissible bias.

Hicks, an African-American supervisor at a Missouri prison, had a satisfactory work record until a new boss, who was white, took over. Thereafter, Hicks was frequently disciplined, then demoted. After a confrontation with his supervisor, Hicks was fired and replaced with a white worker. Hicks proved in a lower court that his employer's case was based on outright falsehoods. The prison administration asserted that the severity and frequency of Hicks' rulebreaking was the reason for his termination. But Hicks proved that similar or more serious infractions were often ignored when committed by white workers. He also proved his white supervisor manufactured a confrontation in order to fire him. The Supreme Court nevertheless ruled that Hicks failed to prove that the discrimination was racially motivated and that the fact that his employer lied in court yielded nothing.

As a result of Hicks, in such a case the fired employee must now produce more, direct evidence of discrimination. This not only contradicts two decades of established precedent, but it also has the effect of sanctioning lying as a defense in bias suits and of requiring fired workers to produce concrete evidence of a typically subtle and difficult to prove occurrence. Justice Souter, in dissent, lamented that the Court's decision placed fired workers in an impossible position "for the simple reason that employers . . . are not likely to announce their discriminatory motive."[145]

The Validity of Anti-Discrimination Statutes

In United States v. Lopez,[146] Chief Justice Rehnquist, writing for a five-member Reagan-Bush majority, struck down the federal Gun-Free School Zones Act on the basis that Congress exceeded its authority under the Commerce Clause of the Constitution in enacting the legislation. Lopez marks the first time since 1936 that the Court has relied on the Commerce Clause to invalidate federal legislation. Although Congress presumably believed that gun violence interjected in a school environment interfered with the quality of education which, in turn, is intimately tied to the future economic viability of individuals, the Supreme Court struck down the statute because such concerns do not "substantially" affect interstate commerce.

The troubling aspects of the Lopez decision lie not only in the Court's evident reversal of 60 years of settled Commerce Clause jurisprudence, but also in the fact that Congress has passed major pieces of civil rights legislation upheld by prior Supreme Court opinions on the basis of Congress' power to regulate interstate commerce. For instance, Title II of the 1964 Civil Rights Act bans discrimination in places of public accommodation by covering any establishment which serves interstate commerce. In Heart of Atlanta Motel v. United States,[147] and Katzenbach v. McClung,[148] the Supreme Court upheld the 1964 Civil Rights Act against a commerce clause attack. While Lopez itself does not speak to this issue, the addition of right-wing justices to the Court could well threaten Congress' authority to enact anti-discrimination statutes.

Very recently, this threat has proven much more than hypothetical. In 1994, Congress passed the Violence Against Women Act, a measure intended to create federal crimes for those who attack women. Congress enacted this piece of legislation based in part on its power to regulate interstate commerce, postulating that violence against women affected their job performance and therefore had a substantial effect on interstate commerce. However, in a July 29, 1996 decision, Reagan-appointed district court judge Jackson L. Kiser invalidated the Violence Against Women Act, citing Lopez as the authority to conclude that Congress exceeded its authority in enacting the Act because violence against women bears no rational relationship to interstate commerce.[149] Imposition of a far right judicial litmus test threatens to produce many more such decisions.

Gender and Sexual Orientation Discrimination

In J.E.B. v. Alabama,[150] the Supreme Court held that intentional discrimination on the basis of gender in the use of peremptory strikes in jury selection violates the constitutional guarantee of equal protection. Like race-based exclusions in jury selections, the Court determined that gender is "an unconstitutional proxy for juror competence and impartiality."[151] But the Court's three most conservative justices dissented from this seemingly uncontroversial proposition. Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas charged sarcastically that "[t]oday's opinion is an inspiring demonstration of how thoroughly up-to-date and right-thinking we Justices are in matters pertaining to the sexes (or as the Court would have it, the genders), and how sternly we disapprove the male chauvinist attitudes of our predecessors."[152]

The complaints of Justice Scalia and his colleagues about compelling a state to treat equally its women and its men are the same complaints that have been used to deny opportunities to women seeking admission to the bar, access to legal and medical educations, entrance to the federal military service academies or to police academies. Although the Supreme Court majority ruled favorably on this issue of gender discrimination, the dissent's venomous attacks on the legal basis for such conclusions illustrate the potential consequences if as few as two new justices are added using a right-wing judicial litmus test.

So, too, does the dissent in the landmark case of Romer v. Evans,[153] in which a 6-3 majority of the Supreme Court invalidated an amendment to the Colorado state constitution which attempted to forbid any component of state government from extending civil rights protections on the basis of sexual orientation. Writing for the majority, Justice Anthony Kennedy quoted the dissent in Plessy v. Ferguson, the case in which the Supreme Court articulated its infamous "separate but equal" principle of racial "equality," asserting that "the Constitution 'neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens.'"[154] The opinion in Romer upheld the basic principle that "[a] State cannot so deem a class of persons a stranger to its laws."[155]

However basic the principle laid down in Romer may appear, however, the dissent joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas found much with which to disagree. Eeringly noting that the majority "has mistaken a Kulturkampf for a fit of spite," Justice Scalia characterized Colorado's attempt at excluding gays and lesbians as simply a "modest attempt by seemingly tolerant Coloradans to preserve traditional sexual mores against the efforts of a politically powerful minority to revise those mores through use of the laws."[156] Justice Scalia appeared to criticize gays and lesbians for having high disposable income, political power in disproportionate measure to their numbers, and enjoying enormous influence in American media and politics. Besides the fact that these points in the dissent have little or no relevance to the equality principle at hand in the case, they are astonishing because of their conformity to the rhetoric of some of the far right's worst gay-baiters.[157]

In light of its decision in Romer, the Supreme Court ordered the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to reconsider its decision in Equality Foundation of Greater Cincinnati, Inc. v. City of Cincinnati.[158] In Equality Foundation, Reagan appointee Robert Krupansky, writing for the three-judge panel, rejected an equal protection claim out of hand in circumstances closely similar to those in Romer, finding that the Constitution affords no protection to gays, lesbians, and bisexuals and that a gay person's interest in participating in the political process like any other citizen was not sufficiently "fundamental" to warrant heightened constitutional protection. Acting in part on the advice of rejected Reagan Supreme Court nominee Robert Bork, who authored a "friend of the court" brief in Equality Foundation, the Sixth Circuit relied extensively on the Supreme Court's decision in Bowers v. Hardwick,[159] in which the Court dismissed a gay man's claim that the Georgia sodomy statute unconstitutionally infringed on his right to privacy as against arbitrary governmental intrusions. Although the Bowers Court expressly declined to consider equal protection arguments, the Equality Foundation Court nonetheless equated sodomy with sexual orientation and rejected the claim that gays deserve constitutional protection against electoral majorities which ride roughshod over rights non-gay Americans take for granted.

The federal courts have similarly used Bowers to reject the claim that the wholesale exclusion of gays from the military and the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" exclusion of gays from the military violates the constitutional guarantee of equal protection.[160] To the extent that the far right succeeds in imposing a new judicial litmus test on future judicial appointments, these decisions merely signal the beginning of what will no doubt be a long line of cases curtailing even the most fundamental civil liberties of gay and lesbian Americans.

Disability Rights

The disabled have similarly seen their statutory and constitutional rights damaged by Reagan-Bush judges. In Lane v. Pena,[161] the Supreme Court rejected a plaintiff's claim that he was entitled to compensatory damages from the federal government under the Rehabilitation Act for an unlawful separation from the Merchant Marine Academy. The Court ruled that because the text of the statute does not expressly waive the federal government's routine exemption from the payment of such damages, the disabled plaintiff could not recover damages. In dissent, Justice Stevens pointed out that the Court failed to credit the clear purpose of Congress in enacting and amending the Rehabilitation Act to authorize an award of damages against a federal agency that violates the Act's provisions.

In Heller v. Doe,[162] the Supreme Court decided against the rights of mentally retarded citizens, upholding a Kentucky statute which set forth a dubious distinction between mentally ill individuals and mentally retarded individuals. In Heller, the Court approved the statute's scheme by which a mentally retarded individual could be involuntarily committed to a state facility upon a showing of "convincing" evidence that such citizen presented a danger to himself or others but a mentally ill individual could be involuntarily committed to a state facility only upon a much higher standard of showing evidence "beyond a reasonable doubt" that such citizen presented a danger to himself or others. The Court further approved the statute's scheme by which the family and guardians of a mentally retarded individual could team up with the state as a "second prosecutor" in prosecuting an involuntary commitment motion but the family and guardians of a mentally ill individual could not. Essentially, the Court refused to entertain the notion that a mentally retarded individual's interest in avoiding involuntary commitment did not rise to the level of a "fundamental right" subject to heightened constitutional protection.

In dissent, Justice Souter contended that no rational justification supported the distinction between mentally ill and mentally retarded individuals. He argued that a statute's allocation of burdens of proof reflected not the ease with which some fact may be proved (a contention Kentucky used to support the distinction at issue), but that a statute's allocation of burdens of proof reflected the relative importance of the interests asserted in different cases. Justice Souter referred to the "more likely than not" burden of proof in civil cases to the "beyond a reasonable doubt" burden of proof in criminal cases. He explained that our legal system assigns the much more stringent "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard to criminal cases because a criminal case is relatively harder to prove than a civil case. Rather, our legal system does not assign the much more stringent "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard to criminal cases because an erroneous criminal case verdict routinely results in the deprivation of liberty to the convicted defendant. In civil cases, on the other hand, an erroneous verdict routinely results merely in the payment of damages. Justice Souter convincingly argued that because there existed no distinction between the involuntary commitment of a mentally ill individual and the involuntary commitment of a mentally retarded individual, the burdens of proof should likewise reflect no distinction.

Civil Rights and Diversity On the Federal Courts

Another important consequence of the Reagan-Bush judicial litmus test was that Reagan-Bush nominees were overwhelmingly white and male, with women and minorities largely excluded from nomination. The statistics are striking. Out of more than 600 judges nominated by Presidents Reagan and Bush, less than one in every twenty was African-American and less than one in every eight was a woman. In fact, after twelve years of Reagan-Bush appointments, there were actually less African-American judges on the federal courts of appeals than in 1981. As then-Senior Judge Leon Higginbotham wrote in July, 1992:

> I am forced to conclude that the record of appointments of African-Americans to the Courts of Appeals during the past 12 years demonstrates that, by intentional Presidential action, African-American judges have been turned into an endangered species, soon to become extinct.[163]

This dire prediction did not come true, however, because of the significant increase in diversity on the federal bench under President Clinton. In his first year in office, President Clinton nominated more African-American judges than President Reagan did in eight years. Overall, as of July, 1996, Clinton had made 231 judicial nominations, of whom more than one in four were minorities and more than three in ten were women. At the same time, more than 65% of Clinton's nominees were rated "well qualified" by the ABA, a higher rating than under Presidents Bush, Reagan, or Carter.[164] Neutral observers such as Professor Sheldon Goldman have praised Clinton's efforts.[165]

Yet proponents of a new far right judicial litmus test have specifically criticized Clinton's nominations because of the increased number of women and minorities. JSMP's Tom Jipping has actually accused President Clinton of "race and sex discrimination," and conservative activists are urging that efforts to promote diversity on the federal bench should be ended.[166]

As Judge Higginbotham has written, diversity in the federal judiciary is important to ensure that litigants "benefit from the experience of those whose backgrounds reflect the breadth of the American experience" and to help build a judiciary "that is both substantively excellent and respected by the general population."[167] Both the Reagan-Bush record and the rhetoric of right-wing activists indicate, however, that imposition of a new far right judicial litmus test threatens to re-transform America's courts into an overwhelmingly white male province, with minorities again becoming, in Judge Higginbotham's words, an endangered species.

ABORTION AND REPRODUCTIVE FREEDOM

The issue of reproductive privacy and freedom of choice has been a central one for right-wing activists seeking to influence the Supreme Court. Although judicial nominations efforts during the Reagan-Bush administrations did not succeed in actually overturning Roe v. Wade, freedom of reproductive choice has been severely cut back as a result of Reagan-Bush appointments to the Court, and further erosion of reproductive freedom is threatened in the future. In addition, right-wing activists have made clear that Roe v. Wade remains high on their judicial hit list, and if they are able to succeed in implementing a new far right judicial litmus test, constitutional protection for reproductive privacy is likely to disappear altogether.

Restrictions on Reproductive Choice

When the Supreme Court decided Planned Parenthood v. Casey in 1992, headlines proclaimed that despite Reagan-Bush appointments, the Court did not overturn Roe v. Wade. While these headlines were correct, they told only half the story. Although declining to overturn Roe, the majority in Casey approved severe restrictions on reproductive choice, overturning a previous Supreme Court ruling as recent as 1986.[168] As a result of Casey, as well as several other Court rulings before and since that decision, the High Court has specifically approved a number of significant restrictions on reproductive freedom, including laws and regulations which:

- Ban all abortions at public facilities, including even at private hospitals or clinics which lease space from public agencies, foreclosing the availability of abortions to many women;[169]
- Impose requirements on abortion providers which, according to a federal district court, would likely produce increased harassment of providers, unjustifiably interfere with the exercise of proper medical judgment, and make it more difficult for poor women to obtain abortions;[170]
- Require that doctors performing abortions effectively try to discourage them by informing patients about details of fetal development, alternatives to abortion, and entitlement to public aid and child support if a pregnancy is carried to term, despite a federal judge's finding that such a practice may mislead or confuse patients and is generally inappropriate;[171]

- Prohibit abortions after 20 weeks even in cases of rape or incest, or for any reason other than significant threats to maternal life or health and grave fetal abnormalities.[172]

Perhaps the most serious damage done by the majority in Casey was its proclamation that government restrictions on a woman's right of choice are permissible, even during the first trimester of pregnancy, as long as no "undue burden" is imposed upon her. As a result of Casey, restrictions on the availability of abortions are no longer subject to strict scrutiny as originally prescribed by Roe, and thus no longer need to be "narrowly drawn" to promote a "compelling state interest."[173] Based on this standard, the lower courts have upheld a variety of abortion restrictions, such as:

- State regulation of abortions for the purpose of persuading women not to have them;[174]
- A requirement that a woman be counseled at least 24 hours in advance of her abortion to allow for the state's expression of its preference for childbirth, despite the fact that plaintiffs complained that the result was "demeaning and patronizing" and was "at best useless" given evidence that no patient has ever canceled her plans or changed her decision because of the mandated information.[175]
- Informed consent and waiting period provisions that provide no exceptions for cases of rape or for women upon whom the requirement would have serious adverse effects,[176] such as women battered by their husbands.

Another way in which reproductive freedom is threatened concerns action by abortion opponents to block access to medical facilities, threaten or injure patients and staff, far beyond legitimate First Amendment protest activities. In one of the most extreme cases to date, antiabortionist Paul Jennings Hill shot a physician and his two escorts outside a Florida clinic. Hill tried to raise the legal defense of necessity, involving necessary action to prevent imminent harm to another. Although Reagan-appointed Judge Roger Vinson rejected the defense in Hill itself, he specifically ruled that Hill or any other such defendant could raise a necessity defense to a charge of shooting clinic personnel, and potentially be acquitted of all charges, if he could prove that he had exhausted all available legal alternatives to preventing abortions over a long period and that abortions were about to be performed by his victims.[177] Particularly if followed by other judges, this decision threatens not only reproductive freedom, but also the very health and lives of doctors, nurses, and other clinic personnel.

Even if Roe v. Wade is not overruled, therefore, Reagan-Bush judges and justices have already severely restricted reproductive freedom, and are likely to continue to do so in the future. This trend can only be accelerated if additional judges are added to the federal courts based on a far right litmus test.

Overturning Roe v. Wade

Beyond simply restricting reproductive choice, right-wing activists seeking to impose a new far-right judicial litmus test have made clear that Roe v. Wade is a primary target of their efforts. A key reason for their praise of Reagan-Bush Supreme Court nominees like Clarence Thomas, as well as their criticism of justices such as David Souter, has been the justices' voting records on abortion. In advocating that the Republican Party platform plank on abortion remain precisely as is for 1996, right-wing advocates have specifically pointed to the plank's call for the "appointment of judges at all levels who respect traditional family values and the sanctity of innocent human life."[178] Earlier this summer, religious right leader Pat Robertson specifically urged "Christian voters" to get involved in the presidential election because "we have a chance right now in this coming election to see three Supreme Court [justices], conservative Supreme Court judges put on the Court, which could indeed reverse Roe v. Wade...."[179]

In fact, only two additional conservative Supreme Court justices like those on the current Court right wing would result in overturning Roe v. Wade, since Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Scalia and Thomas have already voted for that result in Casey. The consequences of such a decision would be devastating to women and families. Women could literally be considered criminals by state legislatures for deciding to have an abortion, even in the case of rape or incest. A doctor could be put in jail for performing an abortion, even if necessary to preserve a woman's health. Imposition of a far-right judicial litmus test clearly risks such results in the area of reproductive freedom.
